After the introduction, depicting the fear and terror of the inhabitants, is heard the Russian hymn, followed by the prayer of the people for victory. The great struggle for supremacy, the historic burning of the city, and the flight of the Russians are vividly portrayed. The defeat of the French and triumphant return of the Russians into the city is announced by the fanfare of trumpets and drums leading into and concluding the work with the majestic Russian hymn.

French Method of Developing the Bust

Mme. DuBarrie Explains How the Bust May Be Developed 2 to 8 Inches in 30 Days.

"I am explaining for the first time to the ladies of America," says Madame DuBarrie, "the French method of developing the bust. It is much more effective, the results appear much more quickly, the breasts become firm, plump and symmetrical, the method is more simple, the effects more lasting, and altogether beyond comparison with the results produced here.

"You know the French people have the development of the bust and form down to a fine point.

"By this French method, the breasts may be developed from 2 to 8 inches in 30 days. This applies to women of almost any age, from young girls to elderly matrons, whether the bust is absolutely not developed at all, or has grown weak and flabby, and hangs, no matter from what cause.

"It is beauty of form that attracts much more than the features. You will always find it so with both sexes.

"I will be only too glad to tell any woman who is interested what this simple French method is, if she will inclose a 2-cent stamp to pay for the postage. I will send an illustrated book of it in a plain sealed wrapper that will explain it all."

We suggest to our lady readers that they write to Madame DuBarrie for particulars of this remarkable French Method, inclose 2 cents in stamps for the illustrated booklet and address it to Mdme. DuBarrie, Suite 1737 Quincy Building, Chicago, Ill.

Wilbur's

During the month of May we increased our business more than 35 per cent. The backward season (?) or early spring (?) in no way interfered with the making of records. Every month shows a substantial gain over that of past seasons and we do not attribute these splendid increases to personal popularity, but wholly to the fact that this store offers, in every sense of the term, "the stock of the town" from which to choose, and every garment regularly priced at a figure fair alike to buyer and seller. We have put out some unusually good specials the past 30 days, but we can truthfully say that those quoted below are in some particulars the best of all. They will help make sales records for June.

DOW TO LEAVE CITY

Chief Clerk of Alamo Hotel Will Be Manager of North Dakota Hostelry.

J. Neal Dow, who has been chief clerk at the Alamo hotel for the last six months, has been appointed manager of the Hotel Dacotah at Grand Forks, N. D., and will leave June 15 to assume the duties of his new position. From this city he will go to Glenwood Springs for a short vacation, after which he will attend to business affairs in Denver and Omaha on his way east.

Before coming to Colorado, Dow was connected with several of the largest hotels in Cleveland, O., and has been in the employ of many hotels in Denver and other parts of the state during his residence here. Last summer he was chief clerk at the Navajo hotel in Manitou.

COLORADO AND SOUTHERN ADDS TO OFFICCE CORPS

To take care of the increased business occasioned by summer visitors to Colorado Springs, the Colorado and Southern railway has put another man in the ticket office here. This makes three men to care for the business in this office.

The new man is T. J. Connor, an old-time railroad man, and for several years ticket and passenger agent for the Missouri Pacific railway at Atchison, Kan.

William Hodge is still playing "The Man from Home" with as great success as when he first presented the comedy two seasons ago.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS AT MANITOU PARK; COLLEGE FORESTRY SCHOOL IS BOOMING

Manitou Park is fast becoming a place of activity. Since it came into possession of Colorado College by the gift of General Palmer, the life there has changed in many ways. The old "Metcalf cottages" have been renovated and thoroughly repaired, and are now the headquarters of the civil engineering and forestry departments of the college. An extensive boarding establishment has been set up, and tents and rooming quarters arranged for the 60 or 80 men who are there. The whole has been named "Camp Slocum" in honor of the president, who has been deeply interested from the beginning in these summer schools.

The school of forestry, which has grown into one of the most valuable departments of the whole college, will have a very large entering class next fall, as already 130 letters have come from prospective students for its freshman class. These will come from every section of the country. The matter of forests and their preservation in the Rocky mountain region is regarded as more important that at any point in the whole country. This is why Mr. Graves, the chief forester of the United States department of forestry, in his recent visit expressed the deepest interest in the Colorado school, and why both he and Mr. Pinchot regard it as holding the most important position for such a school in the whole country. The graduates of this school receive appointments as soon as they graduate, and Acting Dean Morrill has secured temporary summer work for most of the undergraduates. Nothing in the whole college has probably attracted as wide attention as this school, and its future usefulness will be very great. It has already attracted the attention of the national government, and both former President Roosevelt and President Taft have expressed their hearty approval of the work and the deepest interest in its future.

C. A. Pollen in Charge.

The Manitou Park hotel property, together with the new building, "Palmer Lodge," will be in charge this year of one of the best hotel men in the state, C. A. Pollen of the Navajo at Manitou. Already many people have indicated their choice of Manitou Park for their summer residence, and everything points to very attractive conditions there for the whole season. Mr. Pollen is giving matters his personal supervision, and is spending a large amount of time on the hotels, preparing for their opening, which will be June 15. The presence of the students in the park adds very much to the life there, and it has always been the favorite resort of many Colorado Springs families who delight in its quiet restfulness and its accessibility to this city. The fact that Mr. Pollen is to have entire charge of the hotels will be very pleasing to many people. At the request of the college authorities the state of Colorado has just placed 40,000 trout in the streams in the park. And the matter of re-establishing the old fish hatchery there for the benefit of the park and the fishing in that whole section is under serious consideration.

The engineering department is also considering the repairing of the large dam to the reservoir, which was washed out some time ago, and if this can be done, as is now expected, it will add much to the attractiveness of the park.

The college ranch is now stocked with thoroughbred cattle, by the gift of General Palmer, and something over 100 acres have been planted with grains in addition to the 1,000 acres of hay lands. The 10,000 acres of forest owned by the college is being developed by the school of forestry under the conditions which control the United States forestry reservations, and more and more the park is becoming the center of some of the most important experimentations in the whole country in forestry matters.

The whole work on the summer will be under the direction of Prof. Philip Coolidge of the college, whose preparation at Yale, and whose experience in the service of the United States department of forestry make him an especially valuable man.

The Colorado Midland railway is showing great interest in all these movements in the park, and in the establishment of the schools and the development of the place as a summer place of residence.

FIVE TRAINS DAILY

Beginning June 19, Rio Grande Will Better Local Service to Grand Junction.

By an order sent out yesterday, and which becomes effective June 19, the Denver and Rio Grande railway will have five passenger trains daily between this city and Grand Junction.

The new order reads that train No. 15, which leaves here at 11:50 p. m. for Leadville, will be extended to Grand Junction, 182 miles further on. With this arrangement, the train will arrive at Glenwood Springs at 11:55 a. m. and at Grand Junction at 3 p. m. Returning, train No. 16 will leave Grand Junction at 2:30 p. m. and Glenwood Springs at 5:20 p. m., arriving in Colorado Springs at 4:50 a. m., as at present.

This change in trains Nos. 15 and 16 is made annually by the company, and is in effect throughout the summer.

GIVE POSTALS AWAY

A set of handsome postal cards has been prepared by the passenger department of the Colorado Midland railroad, which will be given away to every purchaser of a ticket this summer, thereby affording a means of advertising the road and the beauties of Colorado in a manner seldom equaled.

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

PROF. SAMUELS ORIGINATES PECULIAR METHOD OF TREATMENT

HIS PHENOMENAL SUCCESS CAUSES ENMITY OF DOCTORS

ARRESTED MANY TIMES

But Acquitted by Juries and Judges and Permitted to Continue in a Work That He Alone Can Do as He Is the Only Man in the World Using His System—Patients Make Startling Statements of His Successful Method of Treating Consumption, Bright's Disease, Kidney Trouble, Blindness, Fits, Catarrh, Heart Disease, Cataracts, Nervous Prostration, Dropsy, Hay Fever and Many Other Diseases That Baffle the Skill of the Ordinary Physician.

WICHITA, Kan.—The most miraculous cure of hopeless invalids made by Professor Samuels, of Wichita, Kan., have been of such a startling character that they have aroused widespread wonder, admiration and curiosity. Time and again he has taken cases pronounced hopelessly incurable by the medical profession and restored the patients to health in a most phenomenal manner.

There is considerable mystery attached to Professor Samuels' method of accomplishing these marvels, and it is known that he does not use the drastic drugs and medicines that doctors depend upon. And it is a matter of proof that with the system this discovery gives him, he has made the blind see and the lame walk. He has revived the flickering spark of life in bodies on the very verge of the grave, and restored to health men and women given up to die by doctors and specialists.

Professor Samuels came into note several years ago by his almost miraculous cure of "Blind Joe," of Topeka, Kan., who was well-known in that city, having sold peanuts and popcorn on the streets there for years. He had been blind for ten years and had exhausted all the means in his power to be cured, but had given up in despair until he fell into the hands of Professor Samuels, who effected a cure.

Professor Samuels has been arrested many times for practicing his system without having a diploma. On being interviewed a few days ago relative to his many arrests, Professor Samuels said:

"Yes, I have been arrested many times for practicing without a license, but in no case have I been convicted. Naturally, the medical profession are jealous of my success, and are fighting me most of the time, but how are they going to convict me? Do you suppose any jury, when my patients come into court, as they did at Alva, Okla., Newkirk, Okla., Ponca City, Okla., and other towns, and tell how they have been cured of all manner of trouble, do you suppose for a minute that any jury hearing these people and seeing with their own eyes what has been accomplished, is going to convict me? My trial at Alva was before a very able judge, Jesse J. Dunn, who is now chief justice of the state of Oklahoma; after hearing the evidence for and against me I was acquitted. At Newkirk I was tried before Judge Hausley, a very able judge. Judge Brown, a noted lawyer, was the prosecuting attorney, and fought the case very hard, but I was acquitted. These persecutions were brought because I had no license. Being the originator and only practitioner of my system of healing, how am I to have a diploma? I can't issue it to myself, and the medical fraternity, trotting along in the same harness for half a century, too blind to accept by discovery, which accomplishes actual results, make it impossible for me to procure a license as a representative of any of the recognized schools. So what am I to do but to proceed in my own way and accomplish results that astound humanity?"

The professor here showed a reprint from the court records showing the proof of his assertions that the court had not convicted him.

Professor Samuels is a remarkable man. Bright, alert, progressive and although 60, he is straight and active and gives one the impression that he is much younger. He talks with such an earnest conviction and enthusiasm of his work that the listener must believe him and believe in his work.

"What is the nature of your treatment?" was the next question.

"That is a secret that has taken many years of my life to accomplish. I can only say that my results are obtained treating diseases by dropping a colorless liquid, which I prepare, into the eye. Strange as it may seem, so-called incurable cases of consumption, Bright's disease, dropsy, epileptic fits, nervous prostration are treated in this apparently miraculous way. My system is based absolutely on scientific principles. The eye is the window of the soul. I have evolved a system of treating other bodily ills based on the relation of the eye to the system as a whole. This may seem strange, but here are the proofs."

Thereupon the professor placed before his interviewer his "Message of Facts," affidavits and letters in great numbers, many of them from responsible and well-known people, all bearing on his statements.

This proved that Mr. Frank Hoff, now in business at 249 North Main street, Wichita, Kan., had been given up to die of consumption. He had been treated by the greatest specialist in Brooklyn, N. Y. It was some seven years ago and when he had tried everything else without avail, that he came to Professor Samuels and was cured. He is a large, strong man and weighs 240 pounds now, and when called upon by the interviewer, stated that he owed his life to Professor Samuels.

Mrs. Minnie B. Tarver, living at Hesterville, Miss., had what was pronounced to be a very bad case of tuberculosis. A large number of her family had died from the same disease, among them her mother, two sisters, one brother and one brother-in-law. She had practically given up hopes when hearing of Professor Samuels and began taking his treatment. She was having fever, a cough and night sweats, and now and then a hemorrhage. She weighed only 120 pounds. After beginning treatment, she noticed an improvement the very first day. She gained in weight until she weighs 150 pounds, her usual weight.

Mr. I. W. Shufelberger, living seven miles northeast of Wichita, was almost blind and deaf, was led by his daughter to the office of Professor Samuels, and was suffering a great deal of pain from his eyes. Professor Samuels restored his eyesight after three weeks' treatment. He goes everywhere unattended and transacts his business and writes almost as well as he ever did in his life. After being entirely deaf in one ear for twenty years, he can hear the tick of a watch.

Miss Ida Garrison, who resides at 963 Roberts avenue, Wichita, Kan., was said to be very low with consumption by leading physicians. She tried all sorts of climate and was pronounced incurable by all. Miss Garrison took my treatment about seven years ago and she treated about nine months and is still in good health.

Mr. W. E. Smiley, of Fairview, Dane county, Okla., had doctored for years for rheumatism, but with no avail. Mr. Smiley could not even stand straight, could not straighten his hands or raise his arms. He had to be fed and dressed. Mr. Smiley placed himself in the hands of Professor Samuels and within thirty days his hands began to limber up, and within three months he was in such a condition that he was able to work on his farm. The people of his home town think that a miracle has been performed on Mr. Smiley, but his cure is simply due to Professor Samuels' secret treatment through the eye.

Mr. P. R. Robey, who resides at 209 North Walnut street, Wichita, Kan., brought his mother, Mrs. P. Spidal, to Wichita to be treated by Professor Samuels. She was unable to move hand or foot, she was even unable to speak. Her case was paralysis. Physicians had given her up and considered her case hopeless. She was taken in an ambulance to the home of her daughter. After using Professor Samuels' treatment a few months she was restored to health.

Mr. Harry Evans, a wholesale lumberman, located at 307 Winne building, Wichita, Kan., had what the best physicians called Bright's disease. Doctors could not give him any hope and he continued to get worse. He was also losing his eyesight from what was said to be paralysis of the optic nerve. He took treatment from Professor Samuels and began to improve from the very start. His eyesight came back, and all symptoms of Bright's disease left. After taking Professor Samuels' treatment he was examined by leading physicians, and they stated he had not the slightest trace of Bright's disease.

Mr. Evans is known all over the country, a leading business man whose word can be relied upon and he would be glad to write or tell anyone of his experience with Professor Samuels.

The young son of W. W. Lyons, located at Augusta, Kan., had been suffering for a long time with a severe case of asthma. He was treated by Prof. Samuels, and is now in good health. In a recent letter, Mr. Lyon writes: "It was the best investment I ever made."

Mary A. Stout, who lives at Burlington, Kan., had what was pronounced to be a bad case of diabetes. This disease is pronounced incurable by regular practitioners. This case was treated by Professor Samuels. In a recent letter to Professor Samuels, she writes: "I feel well, and have no marks of diabetes. May God's richest blessing ever be with you."

"Is it necessary for your patients to come to see you to be treated?" was asked. "No, my treatment can be sent by mail. Many of my patients come to see me, but it is not always necessary. My treatment is sent to hundreds, and, in fact, I am as successful in treating that way as though the patients were right here. To people from a distance who write me, an information blank is sent to fill out. In this way I am enabled to send them the treatment with full directions for its use."

"I should think with your ability to cure you would be in a position to demand big money from your patients," remarked the interviewer. "No, I do not do that now. My charges, when the patients used to call on me in person, used to be pretty high. I am getting old, and I feel that it is my duty in my last years to place my treatment in the hands of the poor as well as the rich. I believe that I owe a duty to mankind, and that as many people as possible, no matter what race or nationality, nor where located, should be benefited by my life's work. On this account, I have reduced my charges so they are within reach of all.

"My greatest aim in life from now on will be to relieve the ills of humanity, and when death shall claim me, I have arranged so that my secret will not die with me, but will be known, so that men in all ages to come may reap the reward of my life's work."

Everyone who is sick, no matter what their troubles may be, should write Professor Samuels, room 134, Samuels Bldg., Wichita, Kan., for his "Message of Facts," and they will find something in it of interest to them.

Mr. Moses is now in the city and will be entertained by members of the lodge.

A Colorado Springs Man in Japan

Walter S. Ashby Describes the Beginning of His Trip Around the World—Honolulu and the Hawaiian Islands—Yokohama and Its Hustling Salesmen—First Ride in a Rickshaw—Queer Exhibitions in Toyland.

By WALTER S. ASHBY.

Our ship "Korea," Pacific Mail S. S. Co., got under way from San Francisco to the usual accompaniment of tearful goodbyes, shoutings of orders and confusion. With no friends at the pier to wave us goodbye our chief concern was to miss neither our lunch or San Francisco bay.

Our first taste of the Orient was an entire Chinese crew. The principal officers of the ship were white. The crew were very interesting to such greenhorns as we. Their costumes and lack of them as the weather grew warmer furnished much amusement. As soon as we were upon the high seas the stokers who were off duty brought out several varieties of gambling games and did a thriving business amongst the passengers. Before the second week out all had learned that the Chinamen took few chances and business fell off accordingly. Our passenger list included army and navy officers, government employes, business men, tourists and missionaries. The voyage was uneventful as nothing was sighted between San Francisco and Honolulu.

On the sixth day out from San Francisco we sighted the Hawaiian Islands about four p. m. After inspection by the doctor we were allowed ashore for eight hours. The usual turmoil of carriages and autos greeted us and soliciled business. We chose the best looking horse and carriage and drove to town. The first thing to attract our attention was the open air postoffice. Compared to our offices this one was turned inside out. The mail handling and executive offices were inside the building but the stamp windows, letter drops and private boxes opened on a wide veranda. Business houses in Honolulu were up to date but very deliberate in attending to patrons.

Seeing the Pali.

To see the Pali we secured a surrey and horses and did our own driving, getting far more pleasure from our leisurely drive than the people who were whisked up and back in automobiles.

The drive to the Pali gives one a splendid idea of Hawaiian vegetation which everywhere is most luxuriant. Plants which we cherish for a single blossom are here used for hedges and blossoms run riot. Houses are hidden behind trees and shrubs whose growth is almost jungle-like in its density.

The Pali is a narrow pass opening upon a high steep precipice. The beautiful plain stretching from the rocks at the base of the precipice to the sea offers a magnificent view if you could get close enough to enjoy it. At the time of our visit a small hurricane was blowing through the pass. A "Colorado zephyr" is not one, two, three with the Pali breeze. We took turns looking over, two of us holding the horses and carriage to keep them from blowing away while the other looked. The showers which fell at ten-minute intervals during the day prevented dust but small pebbles hurled into your face are not to be preferred.

The Pali occupies a memorable place in Hawaiian history, as King Kamehameha, the last conqueror of the island, drove his defeated enemy over the precipice to destruction on the rocks below, thereby exhibiting a very ugly disposition and putting to death some three thousand men who might have been put to some useful work about the islands. To my mind the problem of the Pali is, How could we drive men against such a wind? We found on our return to the city that the wind was comparatively mild.

Gaily Colored Fish.

Leaving the Pali one is soon out of the wind and again enjoying a splendid view of the ocean and harbor. Honolulu is delightful, the air soft and warm and the climate even. For a person who wished quiet and rest it is an ideal spot but would hardly appeal to an active man.

Probably the most interesting sight in Honolulu is the Aquarium which, while not large is one of the most wonderful in the world. The thirty or more varieties of fish displayed exhibit every color of the rainbow, in shades and combinations that beggar discription. Colorings that we had hitherto considered as reserved for flowers and birds are shown in wide variety and brilliancy. It is as if nature, not content with the wealth of foliage lavished upon the islands, must even beautify the fish in the sea, for no where else are such colorings found.

Yellows, pinks, blues, greens and grays of wonderful texture and rare beauty. Combinations of colors rivaling and resembling the most gorgeous of tropical parrots, tints as delicate that they are mere suggestions, and in many cases apparently transparent. Silver fish striped with black, horizontally, vertically and diagonally. Crabs and the common shell fish have been touched with the beautiful colorings, and exhibit delicate tints in iridescent luster resembling multi-colored pearls. The Aquarium alone repays one's visit to Honolulu.

We steamed out of Honolulu an hour ahead of the transport Thomas, bound for Manila, whose soldiers waved us many farewells.

We went to bed on Sunday night and awoke Tuesday morning after our usual amount of sleep. The occasion was the crossing of the one hundred and eightieth meridian at which westward ships drop a day and eastward bound ships add a day.

First Glimpse of Japan.

To the sea-weary traveller Yokohama Bay is a delusion. The island at its mouth, which is the first land to be sighted is twenty miles from the city, which at a slow rate of steaming occupies some five or six hours. The shore line, at first so interesting, becomes monotonous as mile after mile is passed. In the bay occupying positions of ideal strategic value are two powerful forts on "made to order" islands. To further safeguard an already strongly fortified bay the Japanese sank cement caissons into hundreds of feet of water and then filled in with earth until the islands were constructed a bit of work that few nations would attempt as it meant eight months' hard work at an apparently hopeless task. It typifies Japanese resourcefulness and determination to succeed.

As soon as the ship had come to anchor and been inspected by the quarantine officers, passengers were allowed to go ashore. On the deck of the ship were representatives of curio dealers, Chinese tailors, photographers, and hotels. One of the hotel runners took charge of us, keys for our baggage, etc. We went directly to the hotel and when later our baggage was returned from custom inspection it was apparently undisturbed. Every camera fiend was approached by a photographer who solicited developing and printing. As soon as we had been shown to our rooms we were besieged by Chinese tailors seeking orders for suits. Order a suit this noon, try it on by dinner, and have it delivered in time to wear to 9 o'clock breakfast tomorrow.

Japanese merchants do not wait for you to seek them they seek you. You are followed to your room at every hotel by merchants carrying samples of their wares. Their polite persistency and winnig smile makes refusal a difficult matter.

In wandering aimlessly about Yokohama we went into a shop and made several purchases. The salesmen suggested sending them to our hotel giving our names and room numbers. Our questioning brought out the fact that he had seen us register and had made a note of our names and rooms.

Riding in a Rickshaw.

Our first experience in Japan was a jinrikisha ride. A "rickshaw" has two high wheels placed rather close together, a narrow seat and two short shafts. In rainy weather a small buggy top is raised. They are painted black and highly finished the same as our carriages, some of the better ones are rubber tired.

A person's first attempt to board a rickshaw" is no small adventure. The shafts rest on the ground tilting the seat sharply forward. You look doubtfully at the slender shafts wondering whether they will bear your weight. You finally make a mad scramble for the seat and after you gain it you can keep from sliding forward. Your rickshaw man insists on your standing up, a seemingly impossible feat, while he tucks a robe about your knees. The colder the day the more careful he is to leave your feet exposed. You are now safely started and feel your troubles are over, when your man meets a cart or another rickshaw. You are sure that you will collide, you are almost on them when your man swerves gently to the left and you pass with several inches to spare. After a few rides you have the rickshaw habit which has a fascination akin to automobiling.

Your coolie takes you along mile after mile at a rapid trot and is apparently tireless. His costume is as distinctive as his vehicle. It consists of a dark blue kimono reaching just below the hips. His breeches are skin-fitting overalls ending at the ankle and are met by a combination shoe and stocking of a stout canvas which fits the foot snugly. They resemble mittens as there is a division between the great and second toes. Rickshaw men wear no additional footwear and in snowy or slushy weather often dispense with these and run bare foot and sometimes bare legged through the streets. We speak of the passing of the horse in America. In Japan the horse has never prevailed and the rickshaw is the universal vehicle, while the bulk of heavy hauling is done by men or oxen. Muscular coolies here haul loads that we should hesitate to put upon a single horse. Their remarkable strength and endurance should be a strong argument in favor of vegetarianism.

Japanese Dress and Customs.

English influence is very apparent in Yokohama and in fact all over Japan where foreigners have entered to any extent. Hotels, shops, and railways all follow English standards. The only American feature noticeable upon their railways is the checking system for baggage. In Yokohama and the other prominent seaports everything is ("L. S. D.") another British influence.

The Japanese are the most courteous nation in the world. Japanese gentlemen meeting, perform a series of low bows, it seeming to be a point of etiquette to be the last to bow.

The bright colors in dress usually associated with Japan are entirely lacking. At street dress. Dark grays and browns are the prevailing colors. The native dress however, lacks no interest if color variety is missing. On our arrival the most amusing feature of the Japanese was their tendency to European headgear, derby hats preferred. A solemn visaged Japanese, clad in flowing kimono and crowned with an antique derby hat, presents an amusing sight for the first day or so, after which you are accustomed to them.

Japanese shoes have no uppers other than two shapes of leather or cloth fastened on either side to the woolen or straw sandal just in front of the heel. These cross the foot diagonally, meeting at the base of the great toe, where they join and pass between the great second toes, fastening again to the sandal. This permits of the shoes being easily kicked off and replaced. No Japanese enters a native house or shop wearing shoes. Europeans in many places being required to remove shoes and slip on woolen slippers. For rainy weather or slush the Japanese shoes are put on stilts or blocks to raise the feet out of the wet. To hear a crowd of them clattering down a station platform, reminds one of horses on pavement.

Yokohama is chiefly European, so we left the day following our arrival for Kamakura.

The Bronze Buddha.

Kamakura was at one time the capital of Japan and had over a million population. Today it is a small picturesque fishing village delightfully situated. In summer it is a favorite resort of Yokohama residents.

Kamakura furnishes many interesting walks for the visitor and has numerous relics and temples. Chief amongst these is the great bronze Buddha or Daibutsu. This remarkable piece of bronze work is fifty feet high and represents Buddha in a sitting position. The statue is over six hundred years old and has had several temples erected over it, two of which were destroyed by earthquakes and the last about four hundred years ago, by a tidal wave, since then the statue has been exposed to the air. Seated in a beautiful garden with a background of wooded hills the effect of this famous statue is most impressive.

The calm serenity of the face is wonderful and is said to typify the truest type of Buddhism. It's perfect proportion greatly lessens its apparent size which is better realized on a closer approach. One may enter the interior and ascend to the head in which has been erected a small shrine. A person wishes for an opportunity to see this statue a number of times as one visit is not sufficient to grasp its true beauty and impressiveness. To me it is the finest thing, man made, in Japan. The silver boss on its forehead weighs thirty pounds and is of pure silver; the eyes, nearly four feet long, are of pure gold. One wonders how the work was accomplished so many centuries ago, for Japanese methods, even today, seem very primitive.

Girl "Rickshaws."

The hotel at Kamakura, Kaihin-in, was charming, newly built, neat and clean. It was ideal in all respects but one, a fault common to every hotel in Japan, it was not heated. The Japanese do not have fires in their houses, using a small charcoal fire to warm their hands. This is contained in a sort of jardiniere and is called an hibachi. More than five small bits of charcoal at a time is extravagance. We got cold at Yokohama and were not really warm again until we got to a ship once more.

In the Kaihin-in hotel the bell "boys" were girls whose every service was rendered with a bow preceding and a bow, following with a bow for every suggestion made. These girls dressed in native costume were very pretty and seemed very anxious to please. They were so tiny and seemed so young that you could not resist their pleasant smiles. We several times expressed the wish that we might take a few of them home with us.

We ran into a heavy snow storm in Tokyo which made the streets slushy and bad. A novelty in rain coats was observed among the coolie class, consisting of long wisps of straw tied by the ends to form long fringes which form the coat. These are tied about the neck and with the comical straw hats which complete the outfit gives the wearer the appearance of a walking straw stack. We also saw the original Merry Widow hat. It was at least four feet wide and was worn by a man in place of carrying an umbrella.

We visited in Tokyo the largest store in Japan run by the eleven Mitsui families and called the Mitsukoshi. It contains numerous departments both for Japanese and Europeans. We were informed by one of the proprietors that it was the Marshall Field's of Japan. It was necessary for us to have covers placed over our shoes before entering.

We were surprised at the amount of English spoken and learned that it was compulsory in the public schools while a university graduate must speak and write three languages besides Japanese.

STATUE OF GENERAL CUSTER UNVEILED BY HIS WIDOW, ASSISTED BY THE PRESIDENT

MONUMENT TO GEN. GEORGE A. CUSTER UNVEILED AT MONROE, MICH., YESTERDAY.

MONROE, Mich., June 4—With President Taft as one of the orators, the equestrian statue of Major General George Armstrong Custer was unveiled here today, Mrs Elizabeth B. Custer, widow of the martyr of the Little Big Horn, pulling the silken ribbon which exposed the statue to view.

The little town of Monroe was in festive array for the event. For several days old comrades in arms of General Custer have been gathering here to pay this tribute to his memory. To their presence was added two battalions of the Twenty-sixth U. S. Infantry and their presence added the final touch to the inspiring picture presented here today. Flags floated everywhere, bands played and cannon boomed. A street parade preceded the unveiling ceremonies in the public square where the statue stands

Previous to the parade, President Taft paid a visit to St. Mary's cemetery, where he was tendered a reception He spoke briefly to the assemblage of girls in white who greeted him

The statue was unveiled by Mrs Custer at 10 50 a m, assisted by President Taft As the handsome widow, her shoulders thrown back and her head held proudly high, pulled the ribbon that disclosed to view the bronze equestrian figure of Custer, the cannon boomed the first gun of a salute. As the hero seemed to look directly in the face of his wife, a lump rose in her throat and tears rolled down her cheeks

As the Twenty-sixth Infantry band burst into the strains of "Paddy's Day in the Morning" smiles broke through the widow's tears, cheers rent the air and the cannon boomed the salute, the band struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" and with a perfect sun tempering the crisp lake breezes, the scene was completed.

To witness the unveiling ceremonies, a distinguished company assembled, including besides President Taft and Mrs Custer Governor Warner of Michigan his staff and members of the state legislature

Bishop Foley, of Detroit, delivered the invocation with which the proceedings were formally opened Preceding the dramatic unveiling by Mrs Custer the report of the monument commission was read and Edward C. Potter sculptor of the statue made a brief address U S Senator William Alden Smith, of Michigan, delivered the oration of the day.

Senator Smith added a striking tribute to Mr Taft to his eulogy of Custer He declared that the present occupant of the White House would take rank with the most illustrious of our Presidents

The President followed Senator Smith and was tendered a flattering reception. He said that Michigan was properly proud of Custer.

"His name," said the President, "calls before the memory all the heroic cavalry figures of history—of the type of Prince Rupert and Murat A brigadier general at 23 and major general at 25, he showed through all his life that same truth and force which is seen in most of the great military commanders of the world He was one of the heroes of the Civil war"

The President while paying this tribute to Custer's war record laid particular stress upon Custer's services on the plains and in the days of the Civil war, and in this connection again paid high tribute to the regular army

"Custer," said the president, "was one of the vanguard of civilization in the western country, his efforts having contributed to the stamping out of savagery and opening the way to the progress that has since followed

ROOSEVELT TO TURN

mark one of the most momentous occasions in the mining district, and, as some are confident, the beginning of a new era of unexceled prosperity for the camp and those dependent on the output of ore

While nothing definite has been decided on, the formal program for the day of the celebration, will probably consist of the turning of the key which will lift the bulkhead and allow the water to enter the tunnel, the formal dedication exercises, and speeches by Roosevelt and Governor Shafroth and other state officers who will be present Efforts will also be made to secure the presence of several men of national prominence besides the former President

The El Paso property will be the first mine in the Cripple Creek district to be tapped by the tunnel and for this reason, the exercises will be held as soon as this point is reached in the bore When the tunnel has progressed sufficiently, a small hole will be drilled at the bottom of the El Paso main shaft, and a crosscut made underneath. In this excavation the bulkhead will be built and a valve installed in such a banner that the master of ceremonies will simply have to turn a key on the day of the celebration, in order to open the bulkhead

Last month's report shows that 393 feet was covered by the men constructing the tunnel, making the length of the bore from portal to breast, 13,637 feet There remains 847 feet to the El Paso shaft, where the dedication exercises will be held, and 1,847 feet to the main water course The work is being pushed with the utmost speed, and everything will be in readiness for one of the biggest and most important celebrations ever held in the west, when the latter part of August rolls around.

The officers of the Cripple Creek Drainage and Tunnel company, all local men, are: Frank G. Peck, president; A. L. Burris, vice president, F. F. Castello, treasurer; W. R. Waterton, secretary.

GO AFTER THE CAUSE

hope to be better than the evil which it hopes to elect at the next election The present trouble is found in the fact that the men who make and who sell liquor are the people who are handling the political parties of this nation and are keeping prohibition planks out of the platforms of the parties at their conventions when a majority of the people who will cast ballots have been talking about doing away with it and desire to have it wiped out but have not, under the present regime the means of making their wishes felt

"If the liquor traffic is an evil, and the people have shown time and again that they believe it to be an evil then the only thing to do is for these same people to get together under some plan such as has been pointed out by the Prohibitionists to put the right men in the legislature and make it absolutely unlawful to make liquor of any kind in any place of the country shadowed by the American flag Then the greatest wave of prosperity that has ever swept a country will be encountered here"

City Attorney McKesson in a short speech before Mr. Chafin's address, outlined the policy of the present city administration upon the question. He showed that the only reason for the failure to wipe out the evil entirely in Colorado Springs is due to the fact that the people are not behind the law which has been passed Until there is a moral sentiment aroused among all the people, which will absolutely discountenance the traffic, he said, and cause those people who are caught selling it to be prosecuted, the matter cannot be remedied Under the present state of affairs the people who are called to testify as witnesses against liquor men are so bound by a desire to keep the sale going that they will deliberately lead the authorities astray and make it impossible to secure conviction He asked in closing that every citizen of Colorado Springs take it upon himself to take steps to lead in the conviction of every one accused of dealing in liquor The Rev E H Liles presided at the meeting

Mr Chafin also gave a brief address after the band concert in North park yesterday

SPAING STYLES IN HEROES.

Historians Are Ever Changing the Legends About Great Men.

From the New York Evening Sun

Here are the fashions changing again in the matter of our popular conceptions of great men The 1910 Washington and Abraham Lincoln are out The latest view of Grant is now to be had Lee has been brought to date for the season's hero worshippers They are also offering this year a new Benjamin Franklin and Samuel Adams

That is to say, qualifying the sweeping statement a trifle, that the current notions on our great historic figures are changing continually If we don't form a new idea of the Father of His Country every spring the general notions of him do vary at least as often as the vogue in ladies' sleeves

One would think that it should be otherwise When a man has gone to the trouble and exertion of winning himself what is generally called a lasting name, not to say an immortal renown, it does seem only fair that his memory should be something permanent, a sort of long-term investment, free from vicissitudes and alteration, something that shall always, as the bond indentures run, be redeemable at par in gold currency of the standard weight and fineness

Our forefathers recognized this as the due of great reputations For nearly a century they forbore from tampering with the fame of Washington It is not so many years ago that the good old George Washington legend based on Weems' 'Life of Washington the boyhood book of Abraham Lincoln and many another good American was still in full force

The mischief began when John Fiske and Henry Cabot Lodge and S. Weir Mitchell started in about 15 years ago to humanize Washington They meant well, but they brought down confusion upon the good old epic of the cherry tree, the hatchet, and so on The Lincoln legend then in course of construction tended to play an opposition to Washington legend and so to help to demolish it The friends and well-wishers of the Father of His Country, in trying to maintain his ground as first in war, first in peace and the rest of it, wrote biographies and novels to humanize the rather overdone white marble or postage stamp engraving effect of Washington's immortality But attractive interesting humanity was not our early hero's strong trait

Pertinent Notes Concerning Colorado College Commencement

The first presentation of the senior play will be given in Cogswell theater, Perkins hall, this year, instead of in Perkins hall, as announced in the official commencement program. This will be next Friday evening. The outdoor performance will be given in the Jungle, as usual, but especial pains will be taken to improve the stage settings by bringing in and grouping trees and shrubs. The costumes for the play have been obtained from Mrs. Pratt of Denver, and are unusually fine, as well as fresh and new.

The title of President Slocum's baccalaureate sermon is "Permanent Spiritual Victory."

Title of Prof. L. A. Sherman's address before the Phi Beta Kappa society is "The New Humanism."

Title of William Allen White's commencement address is "A Theory of Spiritual Growth."

The recital given by the School of Music on Tuesday afternoon, June 14, will be a prize medal contest.

CHIEF KOHLER ON TRIAL

Testimony Being Taken Relative to Conduct of Cleveland's "Golden Rule" Officer

CLEVELAND, O., June 4.—After an exciting controversy between the attorneys for and against "Golden Rule" Chief of Police Kohler at the hearing before the city civil service commission today, Chairman [illegible] Holding announced a ruling [illegible] body which puts an important [illegible] tion upon the chief's alleged keeping of a list of those who visited the tenderloin resorts. The ruling justifies such action by the chief unless it can be shown that the list was to be used or was used for improper purposes.

The defense sought to show that such instructions were issued by Kohler in good faith, ordering the men to report all such persons, even including the mayor or himself, if seen frequenting this sort of resorts. Only one or two witnesses, however, were willing to admit that the chief's instructions included himself. To prove that they did not include the chief himself, several witnesses were called who testified to having seen Kohler frequently in places of low resort.

JERRY JOHNSON MINE MAKES GOOD SHOWING

Gold Retort Worth $4,500 Represents Cleanup of Week's Operation of Gaylord Mill

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 4.—A gold retort weighing 22½ pounds, and of the estimated value of $4,500 fine, was forwarded to the United States mint at Denver yesterday, through the Cripple Creek State bank.

The retort represented the cleanup made this week by Edwin Gaylord, lessee on the main shaft and workings of the Jerry Johnson Mining company on Ironclad hill, and operating the Gaylord mill on the same property. The ore treated at this plant, using the cyanide process, is the low grade mine and dump rock of too low value to permit of shipment to the valley plants. The mill is treating this ore with success and at profit to the lessee and company.

The Jerry Johnson mine is also shipping daily to the valley mills and smelters. A recent strike on the property has materially increased both the tonnage and value of the ore marketed.

El Paso Shipments.

One hundred and ten cars, with an average content of 25 tons each, was the production made in May by the several sets of lessees, engaged in the development of the Beacon hill estate of the El Paso Consolidated Gold Mining company, and working over the immense dumps. At a conservative estimate the average value per ton of the ore marketed is $25, as much high grade ore has recently been opened up by more than one of the lessees, so that the gross bullion value of the output will approximate $68,750.

Vindicator's New Strike.

The mine samples of the Vindicator company would indicate that the strike on the 1,400-foot level, on the No. 3 south vein, is of more importance and the ore of higher value than at first reported. It was stated by the writer, when the discovery was first announced that shipments would average five ounces gold to the ton, but judging from the following figures taken from today's report, the estimate was if anything too congervative.

No. 3 south vein—Inside grab, 7.84 ounces gold; outside grab, 3.20 ounces; top streak grab, 19.32 ounces; bottom streak grab, 18.54 ounces. North of the shaft on the No. 5 north vein the grabs were as follows: Grab sulphurets, 12.10 ounces, grab coarse rock, 1.58 ounces.

In both these veins there are seams of ore and talc that are excluded from the tests. These streaks would return values up in the thousands.

CHINESE BOYCOTT AMERICAN GOODS

DENVER, June 4.—According to developments today, Denver Chinamen have inaugurated a boycott against American goods and American products of all kinds, and are going to buy their supplies in Canada and the British markets.

The ban has been announced by the secret organization of the Denver Chinese. They did not intend that the fact should become known, but several of them took the matter up with government officials, and revealed the reason of the boycott, as well as the fact that it is to be a nation-wide movement in America.

Denver Chinese insist that the movement is to show their loyalty to their native land because of the alleged unjust and unfair treatment accorded Chinese in this country.

JURY SENDS HARWOOD TO PRISON FOR LIFE

DENVER, June 4.—The jury in the case of James L. Harwood, aged 28, on trial for the murder of Henry C. Meier, a bartender, brought in a verdict of first degree murder today, with the penalty of life imprisonment. His attorney was given five days in which to file a motion for a new trial. September 15, 1909, Harwood, who is a Southerner, went into the Atlas saloon and asked Bartender Robert Jack for a drink. Jack refused him, and told him that he was already too drunk. Harwood shot at Jack, but [illegible] Meier spoiled his aim by striking his arm. Harwood then turned the gun on Meier, killing him instantly.

COMMANDER FERGUSON HIT BY AUTOMOBILE

DENVER, June 4.—As he stepped from a car in front of the capitol building today, W. W. Ferguson, department commander of the Colorado-Wyoming G. A. R., and custodian of the war relic department, in the basement of the capitol building, was knocked down by an automobile and suffered injuries which necessitated his removal to Mercy hospital. No bones were broken, but he was badly bruised and shaken up, and it is thought possible he suffered internal injuries.

PRICE OF SWITCHES LIKELY TO ADVANCE

VICTORIA, B. C., June 4.—Women in the United States who purchase switches will be interested to learn that a crusade has been begun by the Chinese government against Chinese who supply human hair for shipment to America, according to reports brought by the Empress of India. It seems that a charitable institution of Canton, which buries large numbers of paupers whose relatives are unable to provide coffins, found the hair dealers exhuming corpses to secure hair, and when this action was reported to the authorities, action was taken against the dealers. Instances have also been reported of hair exporters cutting [illegible] in crowds, and officials are greatly [illegible] g all apprehended.

SOCIALISM IS COMING

great and difficult problem that I am quite willing to admit we have not yet solved and the question which the country will have to determine after all is which party it is which has heretofore shown sufficient skill and effectiveness in dealing with great issues which party can be trusted to solve that problem than which we have had no greater in the history of the country."

Mr. Taft spoke in the open air to a grandstand filled with a throng which gave him a demonstrative welcome.

Mr. Taft dined tonight with Representative Charles Townsend. Senators Burrows and Smith also were there. Mr. Townsend is an announced candidate for Senator Burrows' seat, but during the two days of the President's visit to Michigan there has been a sort of armed truce between the two men.

The President divided his day between Monroe and Jackson. At Monroe he spoke at the unveiling of a statue of General George Armstrong Custer.

At 8 o'clock the President, after having traveled about 1,500 miles during the last two days and a half, left here for Washington via Toledo and Buffalo. He will reach Washington tomorrow night.

WHEN T. R. RETURNS.

THE greatest mystery, the most interesting topic in politics just now is what will Roosevelt do when he returns? Everybody admits that he can make or complete the unmaking of the Taft administration by a word. If he chooses to come out with an unequivocal declaration in support of the man he made President it will mean at least a temporary quietus to the present storm of criticism. On the other hand, if he openly displays dissatisfaction with the manner in which Mr. Taft has seen fit to carry out "my policies," it will be the straw that will break the camel's back. The administration is wobbly enough at best, and even the veiled displeasure of the powerful Roosevelt would cause it to lose its last vestige of popularity.

It would be interesting to know what is happening behind the scenes. A few days ago Senator Root met the former President in London and had a powwow with him lasting two hours. At its conclusion Mr. Roosevelt was silent and Senator Root merely said that the talk was mostly "of a zoological nature"—whatever that may mean. Then Representative Hamilton Fish of New York brought joy to the Insurgents and consternation to the Regulars by announcing that he had received a letter from Mr. Roosevelt containing intimations of sympathy with the Insurgent cause. But it seems that these intimations were merely a commonplace utterance to the effect that "you know my views on the subject of political independence, and they have not changed since I last talked with you." This was in reply to a long letter in which Mr. Fish gave the former President a complete history of the entire Insurgent movement, as it has developed since the departure of the African expedition.

One thing is certain immediately after Mr. Roosevelt gets home he is to have a conference with the Insurgent leaders. He has asked Mr. Fish to meet him in New York and will speedily be informed of everything that has developed since Gifford Pinchot made his report at Porto Maurizio. But the Regulars have also been busy so it is probable that Mr. Roosevelt is thoroughly informed on both sides of the question.

ROOSEVELT'S PROBABLE COURSE. One guess is as good as another, and ours is that Roosevelt will not repudiate, or even seriously reflect on, the Taft administration—for the present. Of course, if he really wanted to do so he could find a way to do it without laying himself open to a charge of bad faith, but remembering that it was he more than all other influences combined that made Taft President, it is much more reasonable to suppose that he will choose to stand by his creature for the present.

Later on, six months, or a year, or a year and a half from now, he may find it expedient to adopt a different course. Taft is pretty certain to keep on making blunders, and if Roosevelt wants to repudiate him at any time in the future he can easily find an excuse for doing so, and the chances are ten to one that the country will support him in it. Of course if that happens it will mean good-by to any prospect of a second term for the present occupant of the White House, and it will as certainly mean the triumphant re-entry of T. R. to that desirable dwelling place on March 4, 1913.

It goes without saying that never before in the history of America has a private citizen possessed the power which Mr. Roosevelt now holds. The use he makes of it may affect the welfare of the nation for generations to come. Let us hope fervently that the adulation showered upon him in Europe and the unquestioning faith of his countrymen have not turned his head. It is all very well to have a popular idol, but none of us wants a Caesar, either real or pseudo.

THE CAUSE OF THE CHERRY DISASTER.

EVENTS move so swiftly in this busy age that the Cherry mine disaster, which shocked the country only last November is now almost forgotten. No less than 265 men lost their lives in that terrible accident and a legacy of misery was left to their families which will continue to blight their lives for years to come. And finally, after an investigation covering more than six months, the coroner's jury has found that it was entirely a matter of carelessness and criminal neglect.

According to this finding there were three causes of the wholesale loss of life: first, careless landling of a load of hay which was allowed to come in contact with a torch; second, delay in giving the alarm soon enough to permit the men to escape, and, third, violation of the state mining laws in regard to means of escape from the third vein of the mine. Fifty-one men died in this vein, and it is declared that the violation of the law which was responsible for their death was done by the mine owners with the full knowledge and consent of the [illegible] inspectors.

It would appear from this showing that there is a case for the district attorney, if he is indifferent for a grand jury. It is a common thing for railroads, manufacturing and mining companies and other corporations to violate, deliberately laws enacted for the safety of their employes. This is bad enough in itself and ought to be severely punished, but when state officials, hired as inspectors and paid by the people to prevent such violations, are parties to the offense it is infinitely worse.

THE WRONG KIND OF INSPECTION. In this case it is clear from the coroner's verdict that at least fifty-one of the lives lost in the Cherry disaster could have been saved if the mine owners had provided the means of escape required by law. It is too much to expect that the company will ever be punished in a degree commensurate with the enormity of the offense, and it is hardly likely that the inspectors will sustain any worse punishment than dismissal, for men in that position are usually protected by political influence.

The whole affair directs attention to the criminal folly of a system of inspection which does not inspect. It was precisely that sort of inspection that resulted in the exits of the Iroquois theater being locked and barred on the outside when the memorable fire occurred which cost nearly 600 lives, and it was the same sort of inspection that caused the same thing to happen in the Collinwood public school fire, near Cleveland, where scores of children were burned to death because the exits were locked. When such a holocaust occurs the whole nation fairly seethes with indignation for a few weeks and then forgets all about it—until the tragedy is repeated. In such matters an ounce of prevention is worth several tons of cure, and the only way to prevent criminal neglect is to exercise unceasing vigilance.

LAWLESS EGYPTIANS AND US.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

A few days ago, in a populous and enlightened state of the union, a nigger was fiendishly lynched because he struck with his fist a white man who had no doubt been abusing him. On the same day the great and only (thank Heaven) Roosevelt, speaking as the representative of a nation that, with Russia, shows the highest rate of murder and lawlessness in the world (thanks to her political mountebanks), while the honored guest of a nation whose domain, home and colonial, has not been disgraced by a single lynching in more than half a century and whose record for the suppression of crime is the highest in the world, characteristically outraged the proprieties by denouncing his hosts for the alleged lawlessness in Egypt and ordered them to do things more to his liking there or get out.

Ad nauseam, ab gallibus superbus!

This is the great and only (thank Heaven) Roosevelt who a few years ago compelled law-abiding citizens to knuckle to a band of assassins compared to whom the Egyptian variety are but hair-pulling babes, and who thus precipitated his first panic, with its losses to the rich and suffering for the poor—because his action was taken as an unequivocal announcement that the government, under his hand, could not be looked to for any protection whatever against mob rule.

It appears that a premier has been assassinated in Egypt. They are novices over there. In this country, within a generation, three noble Presidents were murdered (thanks for at least two of the murders to our political mountebanks), a record that no effete old world nation can show. And five days before the assassination of McKinley this same Roosevelt made a revolutionary attack on property rights that was characterized by the New York Sun as follows: "Since the pens were laid away and the voices stilled that prepared for the French revolution, perhaps no more radical and destructive sentiment than this has ever been pronounced by any person entitled to the attention of serious men."

And he has further exerted his benign influence on lawlessness by such emanations as the following: "The methods by which the Standard Oil—(He never bothers to specify, but he of course means the heinous method of selling gasoline cheaper than competitors would like to exact for it, for that is the worst thing of which Standard Oil has ever been accused)—the methods by which the Standard Oil people and those engaged in the other combinations of which I have spoken above achieved great fortunes can only be justified by the advocacy of a system of morality which would also justify every form of criminality on the part of a labor union, and every form of violence, corruption and fraud, from murder to bribery and ballot-box stuffing in politics."

And poor old Grandpa Rockefeller, who never spoke an unkind word about anybody in his life, says that he believes the other is "actuated by the highest motives." Great giraffes! Wouldn't that make a hippo giggle? John D. makes me almost as mad as T. R.

And now this great and . Oh' damn; what's the use? He is to be our next President because Heaven will not likely intervene, and because the people so love a meddler; they so love to see each other jumped on and humiliated and despoiled. And I don't know but what I would just as lief see him in the White House as the substitute that he put there while he went off to enforce his policies on the kangaroos and crowned heads, and who is rattling around trying to be as mean as Roosevelt without being able to do it with the latter's strenuous spectacularity, but managing to do almost as much harm.

And when Napoleon gets back from Elba watch for the bust up of a social as well as a business fabric that is even now tottering under his policies to doom. There never yet was a people that could stand a high grade of prosperity. Mr. Hill does not know it all. He said the other day that "they" could not take away the railroads' rights. "They" are showing him that they can, and that they are tickled to death to do it. Cataclysm and another Dark Age are seemingly inevitable. Let 'em come.

C. E. TSCHUDI.

BULLDOZING WITNESSES.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

I have read with much interest in your Open Parliament the articles relating to the treatment of witnesses. They are true. Anyone who has been a witness or juror can certify to the contemptible methods resorted to. It may be well for some attorneys that their lives are not exposed to the public. Yet they pose as saints and through the use of vile imputations thrown at a witness hope to clear their client. The lawyer who defends a prostitute or a saloonkeeper, or the known thief, stoops to the level of his client and sells himself for the fee. He is working to defeat justice and should not be allowed to appear before any court. It is to be hoped the members of the bar will rid the city of these, and laying aside politics, friendship and other ties, purify the bar and lift the courts of Colorado to the highest plane of honesty.

"JUSTICE TO ALL."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

To the Editor of The Gazette

The following is offered to correct certain erroneous assertions made about Christian Science in articles published in your issues of May 19 and 23.

The influence of Christian Science supplants one's desire for worldly riches and material wealth with the desire to be good, holy, pure and righteous.

The thought of the consecrated Christian Scientist is [illegible] filled with the [illegible] of God. Spirit that he is enabled to lift himself above the physical into the spiritual, a realm which is the desired habitation of those who follow God "in deed and in truth." Mrs. Eddy says "Divine science, rising above physical theories, excludes matter, resolves things into thought, and replaces the objects of material sense with spiritual ideas." (Science and Health, page 123.)

Christian Science exposes and denounces hypnotism or the influence of the erring human mind. It saves the victims of this enslaving mortal domination. Christian Science is the realization and understanding of the omnipotence and infinite love of God, which frees man from all false bondage. The sick are healed and the sinning are reformed when man fully understands his relation to God, the all loving Father, "full of compassion, and gracious, long-suffering and plenteous in mercy and truth."

GRAY MONTGOMERY.

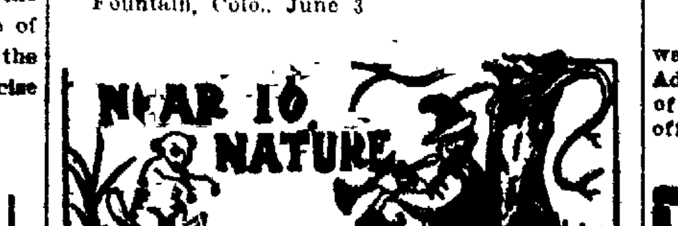

Denver, June 1, 1910.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

Your article on chicken raising in Colorado I think is very misleading. Colorado is a good country to raise chickens in, but the high price of feed prevents raising them. Break up the combines, corners and trusts on feed and let there be competition in prices so that chicken feed and all other staples used by the consumers can be had at a reasonable price, and we will raise chickens and eggs for you. I have 100 or more young chicks to feed. I went to the store yesterday to buy some chicken feed and had to pay 5 cents per pound for it. Chickens cannot be raised to profit on five-cent feed. That is why chickens are not raised in Colorado—high price of living caused by combines, trusts and corners.

The Savanna baseball boys were so well pleased with the umpiring of Lew Feezer that they took him to the restaurant and bought his supper after the game.

I read through the works of a poet, in search of a Beautiful Thought, and, reaching the end, said: "I know it is nothing but beautiful rot! Such rubbish as this makes me dizzy," I said, as my forehead I fanned; "life's short, and I'm always too busy to read stuff I can't understand." If I had a niece who was able to write up a long string of verse, I'd say to her: "Sarah Ann Mabel Jemima Samantha Fitzurse, this poetry graft is a daisy for folks of their intellects shorn, for people too ding-busted lazy to get out and cultivate corn, and if you must think it and write it, for journal or big magazine, oh, write down your verses, dad blight it, so readers will know what you mean! We're loaded with labors and duties, and we haven't time, any day, to dig up a bard's Hidden Beauties that manner of toil doesn't pay. The poet whose effort is mainly to mask all his thoughts is a bore, so write out your poetry plainly, if you'd slide on my new cellar door."

The Daily Chit-Chat

"Only be admonished not to strike leagues of friendship with cheap persons where no friendships can be. Our impatience betrays us into rash and foolish alliances where no God attends."—Emerson.

How long does it take you to make a friend?

Are you one of those people who grasp at each new propinquity—the little girl beside you at school, the girl who rooms next you at college, the woman at the next desk in the office, the woman who goes to the same church you do and lives at your end of the town, the teacher in the next room—and who tries to make a friendship of it?

Leave propinquity friendships for children.

If you are, don't. It doesn't pay.

The next time you find yourself glowing with enthusiasm over some new acquaintance that you feel sure is going to ripen into friendship, pause a moment and consider this little warning that I ran across in the "Reflexions and Maxims of William Penn."

"Be not easily acquainted, lest finding reason to cool, thou makest an enemy instead of a good neighbor."

Who of us has not at some time experienced at least one of these unwisely hasty friendships that cool into a distinctly uncomfortable status, neither friendship nor acquaintance?

I remember a case of a girl who worked in the same office that I did. We had two or three pieces of work to do together, discovered a surface congeniality—founded I believe in a mutual dislike of one of our employers—and straightway decided that we were to be bosom friends.

She was boarding on the other side of the town. I persuaded her to find a place nearer my home. And then, alas, we both came to a gradual realization that the congeniality was only surface, that she didn't fit in with my friends nor I with hers.

The star of our friendship that we thought was to be a fixed constellation in our skies, turned out to be only the blaze of a Fourth of July rocket, and fell rocketlike to earth.

Since then I have realized that a pleasant, jolly acquaintanceship is a very much better thing to have between you and those with whom your work throws you in daily contact, than a still born friendship.

Now, please do not think that I mean that one should make one's first friends a close corporation, and never be ready to admit any new ones, however congenial.

Emerson says, "Every man passes his life in a search after friendship." That is as it should be and any man who ceases to make that search has lost some of his humanity.

My complaint is only that you be not too ready to acclaim that you have found what you seek.

"The laws of friendship are great, austere, and eternal, of one web with the laws of nature and of morals. But we have aimed at a swift and petty benefit, to suck a sudden sweetness. We snatch at the slowest fruit in the whole garden of God, which many summers and many winters must ripen."

Cease to try to hurry these laws and this fruition.

Forever hope that in each new personality you may find a friend, but be slow in declaring that hope a conviction, and acting upon the conviction.

To take another leaf from the reflections of the dear old Quaker gentleman

Be reserved but not sour, grave but not formal, rather sweet than familiar, familiar than intimate, and intimate with very few, and upon very good grounds."

Suggestive Questions on the Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Dr. Linscott for the International Newspaper Bible Study Club.

Jesus Walks on the Sea.—Matt. xiv: 22-36

Golden Text.—Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying. Of a truth thou art the Son of God. Matt. xiv:33.

Verse 22.—What remarkable event had immediately preceded this lesson? Why did Jesus want to scatter the multitude? (See John vi:15.)

Why did he, probably, send the disciples away even before he dismissed the multitude?

If the rulers of the Jews, and not the common people only, had wanted to crown Jesus king, would he have resisted them? Why or why not?

Verse 23.—Why did Jesus need solitude and private prayer?

How much solitude, and private prayer, are essential to one who would have the spirit and do the work of Jesus?

Verse 24.—Why does God permit his children to be so "tossed with waves" when they are on the voyage he has sent them?

Which are more blessed, and why, those Christians that have a stormy voyage and contrary winds through life, or those that have fair weather and favorable winds? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Verse 25.—Why did Jesus leave them in their distress so long? and why does God often permit his children to be buffeted with wind and waves until it seems there is no hope for the ship?

Verse 26.—The disciples saw Jesus coming at last, but why is that any ground for hope that God will, when we are in trouble, come to our rescue in time to prevent any real disaster?

Can you give any examples, besides this, of being afraid of the very messenger, or circumstance, that God is sending to save us from our troubles?

Verse 27.—When, if ever, is there need for a true disciple to be afraid of anything?

Give a reasoned answer to the following: Is God literally in every circumstance, and does he speak with words of cheer in every event, whether loss or gain, or pain or pleasure, to the disciple who has spiritual faculties to see and hear God?

Verses 28-31.—Was it wise or profitable for Peter to have made this daring venture, seeing his faith failed him?

When God invites us, or bids us, do anything no matter how hazardous, should we do it, even if our hearts tremble at the anticipated result, or should we get the full assurance of faith first?

Is it wise, or otherwise, and why, for us to attempt every thing that Jesus did?

What are the limitations to our duty, and privilege in duplicating the life of Jesus?

How much risk is there of failure, if we attempt to do all God commands us?

Verses 32-33.—Could any ship sink in that day with Jesus on board, and what does your answer suggest, as to the safety of all today who take Jesus for their captain?

If they worshipped the man Jesus in the same way as God should be worshipped, what comment have you on their act?

Verses 34-36.—How much benefit would it be today, if all the people of this community would bring their sick ones to Jesus?

Lesson for Sunday, June 12, 1910.—The Canaanitish Woman. Matt. xv 21-28.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Greatest Philosopher of Antiquity June 5.

Plato, who was one of the disciples of Socrates, reverently entitled him, "the best of all men of this time, the wisest and most just of all men." This most virtuous and illustrious of all ancient philosophers was born on June 5, 470 B. C., and died at the age of 70, being unjustly condemned to death. He was a native of Athens and under Archelaus and Anaxagoras laid the foundation of the exemplary virtue which succeeding ages have ever loved and venerated.

Socrates, like the rest of his countrymen, in the field of battle, fought with boldness and intrepidity, and to his courage two of his friends and disciples, Xenophon and Alcibiades, owed the preservation of their lives. But the character of Socrates appears more conspicuous and dignified as a philosopher and moralist than as a warrior. His principles were enforced by the unparalleled example of an affectionate husband, a tender parent, a warlike soldier and a patriotic citizen, in his own person.

The father of Socrates was a sculptor, and the philosopher followed the same profession in his youth. His physical constitution was robust to an extraordinary degree, enabling him to endure the hardest military service and to live his own chosen life of superiority to all wants above the barest necessaries of life. He had the usual education of an Athenian citizen, which included not only a knowledge of the mother tongue and readings in the Greek poets, but also the elements of arithmetic, geometry and astronomy, as then known.

Except in connection with his philosophical career, few circumstances of his life are known. It was not until about the middle period of his life that he gave himself up to the career that made him famous. Deservedly styled a philosopher, he neither secluded himself for study nor opened a school for the regular instruction of pupils. He disclaimed the appellation of teacher; his practice was to talk or converse.

Early in the morning he frequented the public walks, the gymnasia for bodily training, and the schools where youths were receiving instruction; he was to be seen in the marketplace at the hour when it was most crowded, among the booths and tables where goods were exposed for sale. He talked with any one, young or old, rich or poor, that sought to address him, and in the hearing of all who stood by.

Finally his teachings became the subject of much controversy among the skeptical, he was brought to trial and was condemned to death by the Athenian judges. When he was accused of corrupting the youth by false doctrines, he defended himself with great boldness. He spent the interval of 30 days between his condemnation and death in tranquil discourses with his disciples, and having drank the cup of hemlock with a firm and cheerful countenance amid his weeping friends, died with perfect composure, expressing to the last his belief in an immortality beyond the grave.

It was usual at Athens for execution to follow condemnation on the following morning, but it happened that Socrates' condemnation took place on the eve of the day appointed for the sacred ceremony of crowning the galley which carried the ancient offerings to the gods worshiped at Delos, and immemorial traditions forbade all executions till the sacred vessel's return. Thus the death of Socrates was delayed 30 days. His friends tried to assist him to escape, but no persuasion would tempt him to do this. He had always taught the duty of obedience to the laws and he would not furnish an example of the breach of it. To no purpose was it urged that he had been unjustly condemned—he had always held that wrong did not justify wrong.

On June 5 was fought the battle of Magenta in 1859. It is the date on which the first commercial treaty was concluded with Great Britain in 1854. It is the birthday of Bushrod Washington, first President of American Colonization Society (1762); William Sprague, who introduced calico printing into the United States (1773); Columbus Delano, secretary of the interior under Grant (1809); and Jabez L. M. Curry, the soldier and statesman (1825), and the date of the death of Carl Marie Von Weber, the composer, in 1826.

Planting Trees in the National Forest

Work of Reforestation Now Being Carried on Near Colorado Springs.

Thousands of acres of land within the eastern ranges of the Rocky Mountains have in years past been denuded of all forest growth by loggers and fire. The rapid development of the great western cities called for an unlimited amount of construction material and fuel, and the forests of the nearby mountains were the first to supply this demand. Virgin stands which had escaped the torch of the Indian were cut over again and again until all merchantable material was removed. Fire in many cases followed the lumberman and destroyed the young growth which in time would have formed a new forest cover. Thus, mountain slopes which at one time bore a heavy stand of timber are today barren wastes covered with dead and down timber, and utterly devoid of tree growth from which the area might be reseeded.

Today, thanks to the federal government, many of these conditions are changed. The mountain forests are patrolled by rangers who are ever on the watch for fire; the remaining bodies of timber are carefully preserved, and the lumberman is allowed to cut only the mature trees, and most important of all denuded areas are being restocked with forest species.

East of the Continental Divide, and extending from the "Switzerland Trail" to Cripple Creek, are a million and a half acres of mountainous land which make up the Pike national forest. Not only is this the mecca of tourists, but from the streams arising in these hills 250 cities and towns, with a total population of over 400,000 are more or less dependent for their domestic and municipal water supply. With this important point in view, the forest service of the United States department of agriculture is from year to year expending large sums of money to better the condition of the existing forests, and to re-establish the stand, by planting and sowing, on areas devoid of tree growth.

Planting Near Bear Creek.

During the past two months extensive planting and seed sowing operations have been carried on within the Pike national forest on the Bear creek watershed of Colorado Springs, and in the vicinity of West Creek, which forms a part of the watershed from which the city of Denver obtains its domestic supply. All the areas selected were entirely denuded of timber either by logging or fir, or both. Although conditions were not entirely favorable on all situations, an effort was made to select areas typical of the land which will have to be restocked within the Pike forest.

The planting at Bear Creek covered an area of nearly forty acres, along an east and west slope near the "High Drive." Yellow pine and Douglas fir (red spruce), species native to this part of the country, were used in a proportion of about 9 to 1. The seedling stock consisted of one and two year old transplant raised at the forest service nursery near Monument. The young plants, which varied in size from 5 to 8 inches, were set 6x6 feet in prepared holes in the hillside. After planting was completed, a thirty-foot fire guard was constructed around the entire area, and the boundaries of the plantation marked with painted posts. The success of reforestation with seeding trees in this locality will be watched with great interest. Throughout the Pike's Peak range, and in the watersheds of Colorado Springs, Manitou, and Cascade, there are large areas of barren land, which, in the near future, will have to be restocked in order to assist in conserving the water supply of the cities concerned. A pure and unlimited water supply is one of the greatest assets of a growing city, and these conditions can only be obtained by the careful preservation and management of the forests of the watershed.

Other Work to Be Done.

In view of the success which has attended the efforts of the forest service to re-establish forest, conditions on burnt areas in the Black Hills of South Dakota by direct seeding, it was decided that extensive work along this line should also be undertaken on favorable situations within the watershed of the city of Denver. A large tract of land near the town of West Creek, which had been repeatedly cut over and which was swept by fire in 1896, was chosen for the work. As the topography in this part of the country is rolling in character, with many slopes having a northerly aspect, it was decided that Douglas fir, which is locally known as red spruce, would be the most suitable species, and the one most likely to succeed in such situations. As seeding had never been attempted before on a large scale in this part of Colorado, it was decided to try out several different methods in order that reliable data on the results of direct sowing might be obtained.

Following the storm of May 16, seed was sown broadcast on the snow over an area of 30 acres. Broadcasting was also done on the ground over a tract of 15 acres, and the seed raked in over the whole area by hand. On one section of land, lines were run along the contours of the hills with a mattock, and seed scattered in the furrows and the soil raked over.

Corn planters, especially constructed for the work, which dropped from 6 to 8 seeds at a time, were used in planting some 90 acres, while on an area of like size the seed was sown in prepared spots, 12x12 inches, and covered with earth by hand. In all, a total of over 250 acres of burned over land was sown to fir seed.

The cheapness of direct seeding over the planting of nursery grown seedlings is such an important item that it is to be hoped that the West Creek work may prove that this is the most practicable method of reforestation. If the results in this locality are successful the forest service will undertake more extensive work each year along the line of sowing and planting, not only in the Pike region, but also throughout all the national forests of Colorado.

It's just wonderful the way the pain vanishes. Rub the corn—hammer it with your fist if you wish—no more pain after TIZ than if there had never been a blemish on your feet. Doesn't that sound good to you? Doesn't it? Then read this.

"The corns on either of my toes were as large as the tablets you make to cure them. To-day there is no sign of corns on either foot and no soreness. It's an up-to-date God-send. —Sam. A. Hoover, Franklin, N. C.

"JACKPOT" INFAMY BEING LAID BARE

Representative Beckemeyer Tells of Various Funds Contributed to Corrupt Legislators.

SPRINGFIELD Ill June 4 While much attention is being given to the fish bill found by State's Attorney Burke evidently submitted to the grand jury it appears this is trivial compared with the big 'jack pot' raised to control beaver legislation

Representative Beckemeyer is today authoritatively reported to have mentioned a number of bills

For the local option bill, eliminating the township feature and making the city or village the unit to be voted upon Beckemeyer is said to have stated a 'pot' of $100,000 was raised, but this has been strenuously denied by representatives of the liquor interests

For the so-called business corporation tax bill, which was passed and vetoed, it is reported a fund of $35,000 was raised, while $50,000 is the sum mentioned in connection with the bill providing for transfer of valuable lake front lands to certain Chicago corporations

State's Attorney Burke tonight advanced a step further in the investigation of the $3,500 fund alleged to have been contributed to aid in the defeat of the fish license bill which, died in the closing hours of the legislature F. T. Traut of Beardstown, for a long time identified with fishing interests, admitted to Burke at Beardstown that he got the money from John Dixon of Peoria, one of the alleged collectors of the fund and that he sat beside Representative Foster when the bill was slaughtered.

CHICAGO June 4.—In an effort to avoid being placed on trial before Judge McSurely, Monday, Representative Lee O'Neill Browne, leader of the Democratic wing in the legislature, charged with paying $1,000 to Representative White to aid in the election of Senator Wm Lorimer, filed habeas corpus proceedings today The filing of the petition followed closely upon the action of Browne in surrendering himself to the custody of the sheriff

A bitterly contested fight will now begin in the courts, but Browne will not be forced to trial Monday Before Judge McSurely, Judge Scanlon ordered the writ to issue He made it returnable Monday morning at 8 o'clock The writ is sought on the ground that the indictment is faulty for reasons similar to those recently passed adversely to Browne's lawyers by Judge McSurely

Later Judge Scanlon after a strong argument, held that Browne be released in $15,000 bail

China and Japan Send War Vessels to Gulf of Pechili Because of Dispute Over Fisheries.

VICTORIA B C June 4 -China and Japan have dispatched war vessels to the Gulf of Pechili because of a disagreement between the nations over the control of the several hundred fishing vessels from the gulf, according to news received by the steamer Empress of India today Six hundred fishing junks and schooners are operated by Chinese, about half sailing from South Manchuria ports China insists on collecting taxes from these vessels, regarding the Gulf of Chili territorial waters.

Japan insists that China cannot interfere with the fishermen, holding that the Gulf of Chili is high seas The Manchurian viceroy has taken a strong attitude in regard to the question

China sent on May 11 two gunboats and several converted cruisers to seize those vessels whose owners refused to pay taxes and five were fired upon and their crews arrested

JUDGE RULES AGAINST BAKING IN COURT ROOM

Suggestion of Attorneys in Trial of "Bleached Flour" Cases Turned Down by Court

KANSAS CITY, June 4.—There is not going to be any bread baked in a federal court room where Judge Smith McPherson of Red Oak, Ia is presiding

The court announced this today in the course of the trial of "bleached flour" cases here after attorneys had suggested it would be an excellent plan to bake bread in the presence of jurymen, and let them judge for themselves the relative merits of bleached and unbleached flour.

"Bake all the bread you want to outside of court and let witnesses testify regarding its quality, but you can't bake any here," said Judge McPherson.

Dr A L Winton of Chicago was again on the witness stand today Replying to a question propounded by Attorney E B Smith for the defense Dr. Winton said he had stated yesterday that the acidity in flour bleached by the Alsop process was greater than that in unbleached flour Smith then presented a table of experiments made two years ago by Dr Winton upon the two kinds of flour The table showed that in but two of 16 tests was the acidity in bleached flour greater than that in unbleached flour Dr. Winton said the tests might have been in error

DEMANDS REDUCTION OF EXPRESS RATES

George J Kindel Files Complaint With the Interstate Commerce Commission.

DENVER, June 4—George J Kindel today began action against the express companies which operate into this city with a view of having rates reduced He filed an informal complaint with the interstate commerce commission

The complaint was addressed to Edward A Mosely, secretary of the commission at Washington, and explained why through express rates should be less than the sum of the locals

Among other things Kindel said this in his protest to the commission

"In view of the fact that passenger rates have always been lower on a through haul than the sum of the locals and the recent decision of the supreme court that the rate on through hauls of freight and commodities should be hereafter lower than the sum of the locals, I see no valid reason for our arbitrary and robbing express companies continuing the now proven false premises of charging Denver and all intermountain sections the sum of the locals instead of a reduced through haul rate

The express companies do make less than the sum of the local rates between the Atlantic and Pacific coast points and from interior points to either Atlantic or Pacific coast points then why continue to inflict Denver and Colorado with the sum of the local rates"

DR. HART TO REPRESENT THIS CITY AT CONGRESS

Former Local Resident Appointed Delegate to Convention Playgrounds Association.

Dr. James A. Hart, formerly of this city, and now a resident of Geneva, N. Y., will be the official representative of the Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce at the fourth annual Congress of Playgrounds Associations of America, to be held in Rochester, N. Y., June 7 to 11. His appointment was announced by the Chamber of Commerce yesterday.

That the congress will be a big affair is shown by the fact that over a hundred cities in the United States are at work trying to secure playgrounds and that many others have them to maintain.

Literature sent out by the congress shows that 246 cities have established playgrounds and that 154 are conducting campaigns to secure them, while during the spring and summer of 1909, 134 cities spent $1,300,000 on grounds.

One important subject to be discussed at the meeting will be the relation of municipalities to public recreation.

The local Chamber of Commerce has made arrangements with the secretary of the playgrounds association to use many slides showing views of the Pikes Peak region. This will mean a great deal of advertising for Colorado Springs all over the country, for the reason that the association gives lectures in practically every city in the United States, and the views of this region will be used together with others, to show what constitutes recreation grounds.

Charged with the theft of $60 worth of brass fixtures from Short Line cars, Lester Kirk and Cullen Vickers, against whom criminal charges have been pending in the district court for some time, have been arrested by the sheriff's office. The district attorney's office will file direct informations in the district court charging each with grand larceny.

Kirk has been charged with contempt of court, beating a board bill and larceny as bailee, only recently being released from the county jail on his own recognizance on the last charge. Vickers recently was arrested on a charge of forging the name of a foreman at a logging camp to a check for $100 on the street car company. The matter was settled out of court, and he was not brought to trial.

Kirk and Vickers are said to have taken 300 pounds of brass fixtures from cars and to have sold them to M. Goldsmith, a local junk dealer.

The building was given to the town by Mr. Carnegie, with the condition that the ground and $500 yearly for maintenance be subscribed by the town of Manitou.

Specifications for the building call for a building of the bungalow type, of cream-colored brick, and to be roofed with red tile similar to that used at Glen Eyrie. # FISHING RIGHTS ARE IN DISPUTE

QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO THE HAGUE TRIBUNAL.

United States and Great Britain Make Effort to Settle Century-Long Agitation.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

It is hoped that two pending questions with reference to the international fisheries dispute between the United States and Canada will be settled during the present year. One question relates to the century-long agitation with reference to the rights of citizens of the United States to fish in Canadian water. The other deals entirely with the regulation of the fishing industry in the international waters common to the United States and Canada.

The controversy with reference to the fishing rights of the inhabitants of the United States in Canadian waters will be carried to The Hague for arbitration. The United States has prepared its case on the issues involved, and it fills some four or five good sized volumes. Congress appropriated $100,000 last year for expenses incident to the preparation and presentation of the case, and this year a like amount has been asked for. There are seven propositions which will be taken by the two countries to The Hague tribunal. The first of these is whether or not Great Britain and her colonies have any right to make regulations affecting the rights of United States fishermen, without the concurrence of the Washington government. It is contended by the United States that the Treaty of 1818 between the United States and England expressly provided that the Americans should have the fishing rights fofever. The Canadians contend, on the other hand, that these rights are subject to limitations that may be placed upon them in the exercise of police power.

Three-Mile Limit.

The next question at issue is whether the inhabitants of the United States have a right to employ other nationalities in their fishing operations under these concessions. The Americans claim that they do not possess such right, while England holds the contrary view. The third issue at stake concerns the 3-mile-from-shore limit within which the inhabitants of the United States are denied the right of free fishing. The United States contends that this three-mile line shall be drawn parallel with the coast line at all points. England declares that this line must follow the general contour of the shore line and not the various indentations. In other words, the British claim that all bays, creeks and other indentations shall be considered as lying within the three-mile limit. If this contention on the part of the British government is supported by the conclusions of The Hague tribunal, the United States will lose the right to fish in some of the best fishing grounds in all North Atlantic water. Under Treaty of 1818, the Washington government declares that the three-mile line within which it cannot go shall be drawn at low water mark, following every indentation of the coast.

Another question to be submitted has to do with the right of the Canadian government to tax the boats of the United States fishermen. The question or whether the United States has a right to fish freely along the southern and western coasts of Newfoundland also will be considered. About five years ago Newfoundland enacted a law denying such right to the inhabitants of the United States. In submitting its case to The Hague the government at Washington asserts that for more than three-quarters of a century this right was recognized and exercised. The English case sets forth that Newfoundland acted clearly within its rights when it enacted this law.

Thirty Negotiations.

For some years, pending a final settlement of the questions at issue, the two governments have operated under an annual agreement. The British have been very much opposed to purse seining and also to Sunday fishing. The Americans assert that purse seining does no more injury to the fish supply than the use of gill nets, through the use of which millions of fish die and become unfit to be taken into the vessels. As to Sunday fishing, it is asserted that at best the season is short and that if the American fishermen were denied the right of fishing on Sunday, the business would cease to be profitable.

The English at one time agreed to give the United States every concession it asked with reference to the Atlantic fishing grounds, if, on the other hand, the United States would agree to admit Canadian fish supplies into the United States free of duty. A treaty to this effect was negotiated and agreed to by the two countries, becoming effective in 1871 and continuing until 1885, when it was abrogated by the United States. In 1888 another treaty along the same lines was entered into, but the United States Senate rejected it. Two years later another similar treaty was signed, to be later withdrawn by the English government. In 1902 the Hay-Bond treaty was negotiated, but was killed by the American Senate. In the meantime, the British allowed the American fishermen all the privileges they would have been entitled to had the treaty gone into effect. After that the Canadians felt themselves ill-used and fell back upon the stipulations of the Treaty of 1818.

It has been agreed by the two governments that the findings of The Hague tribunal shall not become effective unless they are first accepted by the authorities at Washington and London. It is believed, however, that the contracting parties will accept the findings of the court without further question.

Conservation Considered.

The question of regulating the fishing industry in the international waters between the United States and Canada is along the lines of the conservation of the fish supply. A treaty made two years ago between England and the United States in which it was agreed that uniform regulations for the protection, preservation, and propagation of good fishes should be adopted. Jurisdiction over the international waters was vested in the two governments, each on its side of the boundary line. Each government was given the right to arrest and punish violators of the international regulations whether they were citizens of the one or of the other of the contracting parties. In the regulation of fishing operations such matters as close seasons, the character, size, and manner of using nets, engines, gears and other apparatus was to be placed in the hands of the two governments, one from Canada and the other from the United States.

Under this treaty each of the contracting parties appointed a commissioner. The present commissioners are David Starr Jordan, on behalf of the United States, and Professor E. E. Prince on behalf of Canada. For many months these two gentlemen visited the waters affected, and, together with prominent fishing experts, carefully studied the situation in all its aspects. They finally reached an agreement as to the various matters of mutual interest, and presented their conclusions in reports to their respective governments.

Fishermen Dissatisfied.

The findings have not been satisfactory to the fishing interests of the United States. The salmon fishermen of the state of Washington assert that the treaty itself is unconstitutional, except as to the propagation of fishes, since the waters of Puget Sound belong to the state of Washington, and that the United States has no right to make a treaty in derogation of that ownership. They assert that there is no need for protecting humpback salmon, and that inasmuch as the close season under the new agreement is made coincident with the opportunity for catching humpback salmon, it will therefore destroy the industry.

It is said that unless the regulations laid down in the international agreement are greatly modified, they stand little show of being adopted by the United States Congress. This agreement provides for the appropriation by the United States of $160,000 for putting the regulations into effect. The annual cost of maintenance to the United States, which would include the salaries of seven wardens, one inspector, and the maintenance of seven steam vessels and 14 gasoline launches, would amount to about $120,000.

Another matter which is pending in which Canada and the United States are mutually interested, is the suppression of pelagic sealing. Congress has given the secretary of commerce and labor the right to discontinue the sealing concession on Pribilof islands, and the Anglo-American treaty looks to the elimination of pelagic sealing in all North Pacific waters adjacent to America. The Canadians are asking that they be paid for their vessels and equipment which will be rendered useless when they are cut off from the right of following the sealing industry. Steps may be taken to force Japan to stop sealing in those waters. Under present conditions, the Japanese have a great advantage over the American and English sealers. Being no party to the Anglo-American sealing treaty, they refuse to abide by its regulations, and follow the seals from their feeding grounds to the islands where their young await their return. Using steam launches, they work great havoc on the seal herds, and unless ways and means are found to compel them to stop it, the Alaska seal is said to be doomed to destruction.

Pink and White Wedding

The first large home wedding in June was that of Miss Mary Elizabeth Fisher and Mr. Walton George Harrington, which was celebrated at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr and Mrs Thomas J. Fisher, 1316 North Nevada avenue, Thursday evening. The ceremony was impressively performed by the Rev. John D. Brown of the First Baptist church in the presence of near relatives at 7:30 o'clock. The wedding marches were played by Miss Anna Bispham.

The bride wore a handsome princess gown of white messaline garnitured with pearl ornaments. Her full tulle veil was held with sprays of real orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and maidenhair ferns. Miss Lucille Eleanor Fisher, sister of the bride, was her maid of honor. She wore white mull over pink taffeta and carried pink roses. The groom was attended by his best man, Mr. Louis Brown of New Haven, Conn.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Mr. Henry N. Beecher of Canon City; Misses Margaret and Eugenie Giddings of Pueblo, Miss Lucretia Valle of Denver, Miss Elizabeth Durrin of Peekskill, N. Y., and Judge and Mrs. E. A. Colburn of Denver.

About 300 invitations were issued for the reception held from 8:30 to 10 o'clock. The ladies assisting during the reception were: Mrs. William P. Kinney, Mrs. Charles E. Emery, Mrs George Scibird, Mrs. William C. Bispham, Miss Elizabeth Fisher, Mrs. Florence Rosebach and others.

The floral decorations were notably handsome and in the utmost taste. The roomy porch was decorated with ferns and snowballs and illuminated with Japanese lanterns and punch was served there. The reception hall and the balustrade of the staircase were decorated with white carnations, ferns and festoons of smilax.

Pink and white carnations were profusely used in the parlor and library and in the bay window of the latter room where the ceremony took place, there were curtains of smilax and carnations banked with ferns and marguerites. A large mound of pink and white sweet peas formed the fragrant centerpiece upon the dining room table and all was in pink and white, throughout. The huge bride's loaf was heavily iced and decorated with pink hearts and the initials of the young couple. Each guest received as a souvenir a dainty white ribbon-tied box containing a portion of the cake.

A great variety of beautiful gifts were received and the guests enjoyed inspecting them during the evening. When Mr. Harrington and bride departed on a brief wedding trip, they were showered with rice, confetti and flower petals. After July 1, they will be at home to their friends at 1714 Wood avenue.

Mrs. Harrington lived in this city all her life until she entered Vassar college completing her course in the class of 1907. Mr. Harrington is the son of Mr. Charles Edgar Harrington, editor of the Wall Street Journal, a prominent figure in the commercial life of the metropolis and a former pioneer resident of this city. Until the last moment, it was hoped he would be here to witness the ceremony, but, instead came telegrams of congratulations and regrets at his inability to be present. Mr. Harrington is a graduate of Columbia college and the Boston Institute of Technology and for several months he has been engaged in business in this city.

Perkins—Brigham Marriage.

The marriage of Miss Sylvia Swain Brigham to Dr. Pliny H. Perkins was quietly celebrated last evening at 6 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Brigham, 1220 North Nevada avenue. There were no attendants and the only witnesses of the ceremony performed by Dean Edward Smith Parsons of Colorado College, were near relatives.

The bride was gowned in white messaline garnitured with Princess lace and her veil was finished with a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a shower of lilies of the valley and maidenhair ferns.

The apartments were decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers. The supper was served in the dining room at a table ornamented with a fancy basket filled with white roses and maidenhair ferns. Dr. and Mrs. Perkins have gone on a short trip and will be at home to their friends after July 1, at 1629 Wood avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins were both students in Colorado college and Mrs. Perkins is a member of the Minerva alumnae. ### Signor Perera Lectures.

The illustrated lecture delivered Thursday evening in Perkins hall by Signor Edward L. Perera, formerly Italian consul to the United States, entitled, "A Winter in Cairo and on the Nile," was enjoyed by a large and cultured audience and the speaker was frequently greeted with applause. Prof George I. Finlay of Colorado College, after a few apropos remarks in relation to the subject of the lecture, introduced the speaker of the evening.

While pursuing his archaeological studies in Egypt, Signor Perera had exceptionally fine opportunities for coming in touch with present conditions in that country and he has the gift of being able to impart what he has learned in an interesting way. He is an earnest art student and he has made a specialty of antique Egyptian jewels on which he has become an authority. He possesses a wonderful collection of scarabs, amulets and talismans which many have had the privilege of seeing while he has been in Colorado Springs.

The five hundred stereopticon views with which Signor Perera illustrated his lecture aided greatly, also the Arab songs he sang and the airs played upon a mandolin of native manufacture. Those attending the lecture felt amply repaid and appreciated the chance of listening to so charming a speaker.

Throughout, the program was replete with pleasing and original interpretations brought out under the masterful baton of the peer of all conductors, Mr. Damrosch. The symphony, Dvorak's "From the New World," and the Mendessohn numbers, "Spinning Song" and "Spring Song," may be singled out from the orchestral portion of the program, while to listen to Walter Damrosch's setting of Kipling's tragic poem, "Danny Deever," sung by Marcus Kellerman, the melodious and powerful baritone, and accompanied by an orchestra swayed by the magnetism of the writer of the unique music, is a memory to be cherished for a lifetime.

In the present building the work is self-supporting, although from lack of room only 20 patients can be accomodated at one time, not counting infants. On account of inability to secure the necessary loan of $30,000 at 6 per cent to complete the new building all is at a standstill, and the progress of the work impeded accordingly. Practically all the furnishings for the new hospital have been arranged for by the board and they are anxious to have a chance to install them.

Appreciation was expressed at the meeting for recent donations, consisting of a new Remington typewriter given by the Intermediate league of the First Methodist Episcopal church, and a Victor talking machine with many records, which was given by a friend.

The hospital report for the month shows that there were 22 patients in the building on May 1, and that during the month 27 patients were admitted. The number of births at the hospital in May was eight, and the total number of patients cared for was 49. Patients dismissed during May number 32.

The financial report shows that with the amount on hand May 1, the receipts for the month totaled $1,247.67, and the expenditures were $924, leaving a balance on hand June 1 of $323.67.

The donations for the month amounted to $57.45 in cash, as well as many donations of flowers.

Assisted by her aunt, Mrs. Edgar Howbert, Miss Willabel Lennox informally entertained a few friends at luncheon last Tuesday at her home, 1001 North Nevada avenue. ### Birthday Surprise.

A merry crowd of the friends of L. Arthur McMillan gathered Monday evening at the "Busy Corner" and proceeded to his home on East Willamette avenue, and paid him a surprise visit in celebration of his birthday anniversary. Games were played and a two-course luncheon served at a late hour. When leaving for their homes the young people united in wishing the host "Many happy returns of the day."

Memorial Day Picnic.

In accordance with an annual custom, quite a number of the First Presbyterian church people picnicked Memorial day on the delightful grounds surrounding the home of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Williamson in Ivywild. There were about 30 present and the success of the affair was due largely to Mrs. W. W. Arnold and Mrs. L. H. Gowdy. Out-of-door games were played until a bountiful supper was served from a table spread beneath the great forest trees.

The special guest of honor was the Rev. Howard Agnew Johnston, and as he left that night for the east to take charge of his new pastorate at Stamford, Conn., those participating in the picnic went in a body to the railroad station with Dr. Johnston to see him off and bid him "God speed."

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. Sadie Mullen, 2728 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

Famous Expert Tells

How Fat May Be Removed Rapidly By a Simple Home Remedy Without Causing Wrinkles, Disturbing the Diet or Necessity For Exercise.

"Fat is nothing but unused energy," says a prominent physician, and the man or woman who is burdened with it can easily get rid of it if they wish. All they need is ½ ounce of Marmola and 3½ ounces of Peppermint Water; all of which they can get at any good drug store for a few cents. Then let them take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime until they are down to the weight they want to be.

This simple home receipt is far and away better than any or all the patent or secret medicines, for it reduces the fat safely and harmlessly. The ingredients are in fact beneficial to the system, having both tonic and purifying qualities, and so help rather than distress the stomach. The remedy does not cause wrinkles, for it reduces one gradually and naturally, preserving a good outline, and, best of all, needs neither physical exercise to help it do the work, nor does it require any change in diet—one can get results and still take things easy—eating meanwhile just what, when and how he or she pleases. Be sure and get the Marmola in a sealed package, so that you get Marmola and not a substitute.

More than three thousands years ago, as tiles and marbles from Nineveh show, splendid fabrics were being produced for the adornment of the palaces of the kings of Assyria, and every Oriental rug becomes a magic carpet when one realizes how through the long days of the long centuries these simple people have been weaving in with the colors of the jewel and the rainbow the sunshine and shadow of their own lives.

HIS COMPLAINT.

I don't object to dressing up
For dinner every day,
I'm willing if my wife insists
The social game to play;
A butler may be needed, since
I lately struck it rich,
But darn these salts and peppers that
I can't tell which is which.

I know that women folks are fond
Of social teas and things,
I've spent whole evenings sitting round
While some strange woman sings;
I'm getting used to tony ways,
But habit's hard to smother,
And darn the salts and peppers, that
You can't tell one from t'other.

I've learned the silverware by heart,
The salad fork I know,
And every rule of etiquette
I mastered long ago,
I'm trying hard to play the part
Required of one who's rich,
But darn the salts and peppers, that
I can't tell which is which.

Hand-painted crockery is fine,
And it betokens class,
But there are two things, I opine,
That should be made of glass,
And here I make a plea for them:
Throw style into the ditch,
And give me salts and peppers, that
I know just which is which.

Can This Man Read Your Life?

The rich, poor, exalted and humble seek his advice on Business, Marriage, Friends, Enemies, Changes, Speculations, Love Affairs, Journeys, and all events of Life.

MANY SAY HE REVEALS THEIR LIVES WITH AMAZING ACCURACY.

Free Test Readings Will Be Sent for a Short Time to All Colorado Springs Gazette Readers.

Has the veil of mystery that has so long shrouded the ancient sciences been raised at last? Can it be that a system has been perfected that reveals with reasonable accuracy the character and disposition of an individual, and so outlines the life as to assist in avoiding errors and taking advantage of opportunities?

Roxroy, a man who has for twenty years been delving into the mysteries of the occult, making a scientific study of the various methods of reading the lives of people, seems to have reached a higher round in the ladder of fame than his predecessors. Letters are pouring into his office from all parts of the world telling of the benefits derived from his advice. Many of his patrons look upon him as a man gifted with some strange, mysterious power, but he modestly asserts that what he accomplishes is due alone to an understanding of natural laws.

He is a man of kindly feeling toward humanity, and his manner and tone immediately impress one with his sincere belief in his work. A huge stack of grateful letters from people who have received readings from him adds to other convincing proof as to his ability. Even Astrologers and Palmists admit that his system surpasses anything yet introduced.

The Rev. G. C. H. Hasskarl, Ph. D., pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, in a letter to Prof. Roxroy, says: "You are certainly the greatest specialist and master of your profession. Every one consulting you will marvel at the correctness of your detailed personal readings and advice. The most sceptical will consult you again and again after corresponding with you once."

If you wish to take advantage of Roxroy's generous offer and obtain a free reading, send your date, month and year of birth, state whether (Mr., Mrs. or Miss) and also copy the following verse in your own handwriting:

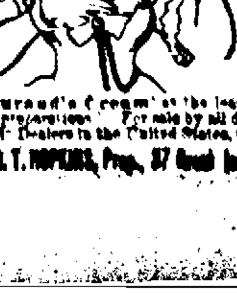

I have heard of your power
To read people's lives,
And would ask what for me
You have to advise?

Be sure to give your correct name, birth date and address and write plainly. Send your letter to ROXROY, Dept. 88-B, No. 177a Kensington High Street, London, W., England. If you wish, you may inclose 10 cents (U. S. A. stamps) to pay postage, clerical work, etc. Do not inclose coins or silver in letters.

Note—Under the new Postal regulations you can sent a sealed letter to England for only two cents postage.

A ROOF CAMP IN THE CITY.

There is a good deal of talk now-a-days about the value of plenty of fresh air in sleeping rooms. Dr. Addison W. Baird in the March Survey tells about a "roof camp" that he has built on the top of his New York dwelling. Here he sleeps and here he finds "rest in the open air is quieter and deeper than indoors. One may be sleepy when the alarm sounds in the morning, but rises refreshened and invigorated. In fact, this urban open-air life has a number of pleasant features. There is a sense of remoteness, of being away from the noise and movement of the city. Looking out over the roofs the scene is often one of great beauty. The electric light streaming upward on the tall buildings of the neighborhood is very striking; and further on can be seen the Palisades with their brilliant arc lights and the dark river beneath. In winter time moonlight glistening on the surrounding snow-clad roofs forms a very attractive picture."

This roof house is 12 feet square and consists of a steel framework covered in with fireproof materials to comply with the building code. Across the front extends a series of doors, so that this whole side can be thrown open. The walls are double and the interspace has openings top and bottom, thus providing free circulation of air; and the roof also is double, with ventilation through a small cupola. The effect of this cellular construction is to prevent the apartment from becoming overheated when the sun's rays play upon it throughout the long summer days. The whole cost was less than $400.

SCIENTIST LOSES TO LANDLADY

From the London News.

An editor was talking about the famous English astronomer, Sir Robert Ball, who has recently declared that radium proves the earth to be 800,000,000 years old. "Sir Robert Ball is as full of fun as of learning," said the editor. "Once I dined with him and a half dozen other scientists at Stratford. At the end of the dinner Sir Robert's eyes twinkled and he said to the landlady of the quaint Stratford inn:

"'Madam, I am going to give you a lesson in astronomy. Have you ever heard of the great platonic year, when everything must return to its first condition? Listen, madam. In 26,000 years we shall all be here again, on the same day and at the same hour, eating a dinner precisely like this one. Will you give us credit till then?'

"'Gladly,' the landlady replied. 'It is just 26,000 years since you were here before, though, and you left without paying then. Settle the old bill and I'll trust you with the new.'"

It is far easier to praise the forgiveness of enemies than to practice the forgiveness of friends.

FASHION AND THE HOME.

The Craftsman.

"I have thought of fitting the interior of my home with walnut wood," a woman recently said to an artist-builder. "Do you advise me to use it? For I do not want to put too much money into anything that is likely to go out of fashion." And the artisan shuddered "To think," he said, "that there should be such a thing as fashion in a wood so beautiful and durable as walnut, that a woman's interest in it should hinge on whether or no others would think it in style or pronounce it the fashion, and that she should stand ready to discard it whenever their ignorant opinion should change! How can a woman," the man continued, "fit up her own home other than in accord with her own taste, her own personal appreciation of beauty and comfort? And having achieved this, or even the vision of it, how could she let her purpose hinge on whether some one else agreed with her, or fancied something different? What relation have other people's houses to hers? She would not permit anyone to dictate to her a fashion in children or husbands or religion, then why in a home which, according to her theory, should be the blessed abode of all three? It is difficult to imagine a more artificial or absurd idea than that fashion could create or destroy anything intrinsically beautiful, and fashion can not even exist where there is an appreciation of the value of work. Walnut wood, for instance, is an appropriate, permanently beautiful fitting for a room, or it is the reverse. Its beauty can not be intermittent."

And the man's argument in regard to wood applies with equal force to architecture, furniture and every final piece of handcraft which enters into the process of home-fitting. It is in fact true of all of life. If you understand the truth about beauty and then labor to express it, you have discovered the secret of right, happy living. And what one or a dozen people think about some new trivial departure along eccentric lines cannot more affect the life of the woman who has learned to see clearly, to live consistently, than the gay chirp of a spring robin would make her decide to model her home after the cross-section of a nest. The achievement of beauty in architecture, in home fitting, is too fundamental and vital a matter to be affected by the chirping of robins, or neighbors. It is the expression, or should be, of all the supreme impulse toward reasonable beauty which a human being is capable of. Imagine a fashion about the material symbol of spiritual development—and a home is this or nothing. But to appreciate beauty fully one must labor to produce it. It is not enough to recognize it. It is necessary to co-operate with nature in making it possible.

Health and Beauty Hints

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

O. M. A.: You can easily stop your hair from coming out by the combful if you will use about twice a week a quinine tonic that you can make yourself by dissolving an ounce of quinzoin in one-half pint of alcohol, adding an equal quantity of cold water. This tonic will destroy the dandruff germs in the hair roots, and put your hair and scalp in a healthy condition. I have no faith in any of the ready-prepared tonics, as none of them seems to do what is claimed for them. But if you will use the one I recommend, you will soon be no longer bothered with scalp and hair troubles. It is excellent for brittle or excessively oily hair, and is the best remedy I know for preventing premature baldness.

T. M. B.: You will find a face lotion made with spurmax much better to use than any powder, particularly during the warmer weather. Dissolve four ounces of spurmax in a half-pint of hot water, and add two teaspoonfuls of glycerine. Spurmax is a dainty complexion beautifier. It will whiten and soften the skin, and give a youthful appearance when applied to the face, neck and arms. It does not rub off or show like powder, and is a splendid protection against freckles, tan and sunburn. This inexpensive lotion will tone up your complexion to a wonderfully pleasing extent and relieve you of that shiny, greasy look.

Mrs. Kate G.: You need not worry about your excess flesh at the approach of warm weather, as you can readily reduce your weight without dieting. Simply dissolve four ounces of parnotis in 1½ pints warm water and take a tablespoonful before each meal. This remedy reduces flesh rapidly and is perfectly harmless. It leaves the flesh firm and free from flabbiness. I know of many cases where a few weeks' treatment has restored an overly fat person to a comfortable weight.

R. B. W.: Simply because your eyes tire easily and readily become inflamed is no proof that you need to wear glasses. Try dropping a few drops of a tonic made by dissolving an ounce of crystos in a half-pint of water. This eye tonic is wonderfully strengthening and very highly recommended for red, inflamed, weak or dull eyes. This simple remedy is endorsed and used by many eye specialists, and is fine for treating granulated eyelids. It will prove very soothing and restful to weak, overworked eyes.

C. R. P.: To make a good greaseless complexion cream that will smooth and soften rough skin and clear it of those pimples and blackheads, mix together an ounce of almozoin, two teaspoonfuls glycerine and one-half pint cold water. Stir and let stand a few hours. Then apply freely. This cream jelly will remove all dirt and oil from the pores of your skin. I find it splendid for reducing the size of large pores, removing wrinkles and correcting flabbiness. Its continued use will do wonders in making one's complexion plump and velvety. I use nothing else for massage purposes.

Mrs. C. L.: Although your hair seems rather scant, you can make it look beautiful and not show any evidence of thinness if you will shampoo it every two weeks with a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water. This will be none too often, as this is a very safe, reliable shampoo. It will cleanse your scalp as nothing else will. It dries very quickly and will soften and fluff up your hair until there will seem to be twice as much of it. Try this shampoo a few times, and very likely you will no longer need to wear false hair. It will stop all irritation, remove the dandruff and restore your scalp to a healthy condition. Never shampoo with soap. The alkali in soap injures the hair, makes it dull, brittle and streaky. You can get a canthrox shampoo at most hairdressers or prepare it at home at small cost.

R. D. L.: I am sorry you permitted the clerk to sell you something else when you asked for delatone. ## FLOYD SETS AN AWFUL PACE

Jardine Forces Davenport to Break Half Mark.

Special to The Gazette.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., June 4.—Jumping from sixth place into the lead and setting the pace until the last 100 yards when Davenport passed him and won the event by one yard in the remarkable time of 1:56 3-5, Floyd Jardine of Colorado College, for years half-mile champion of Colorado, and one of the most promising young athletes of this season's crop, this afternoon carried the Black and Gold of his college into second place in the 880-yard run in the western conference meet.

Herbert Vandemoer, also of Colorado College, forced Nelson of Washington state to run the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds in the preliminary and then failed to get a place in the final which was won by Nelson in :10 1-5. The Springs runner came in fourth. He also took fourth in the broad jump, but failed to get a place in the 220-yard dash, which he had been expected to win.

The half-mile race was one of the most sensational of the meet. Jardine has been running it in 2:01, but the pace he set for Davenport was so fast that the Chicago man shattered a world's record to keep the Springs pheno in the rear.

FLOYD JARDINE,

In Action. His Performance Yesterday in Getting Second From a Field of 10 in Such a Big Meet Is Considered Remarkable.

(Over Gazette's Leased Wire.)

URBANA, Ill., June 4.—In the most spectacular meet in the history of the Western Intercollegiate conference, Notre Dame won the tenth annual meet on Illinois field today. It was the first time that a nonconference college has won the conference. Five conference records went by the board and one more was tied.

The teams finished as follows: Notre Dame, 29; Leland Stanford, 17; Chicago 13; Illinois and California 12 each; Oberlin and Washington State, 10 each; Wisconsin, 9; Minnesota and Kansas, 5 each; Iowa, Purdue and Colorado college 3 each; Western Reserve, 2; Miami and South Dakota, 1 each.

The most spectacular work of the meet was performed by Davenport of Chicago, who broke the record in both the quarter and half-mile run. In each race he held a back position until the final stretch when he broke into the lead and won easily. In neither race was he pushed to his limit.

The individual star of the meet was Philbrook who got 11 points, taking first in the shot put the discus and high jump. The other stars were

Van Stone and His Marvelous Wing Fix Abiding Place of Collegiate Bunting at Colo. Springs

Special to The Gazette.

BOULDER, June 4.—Christy Mathewson Van Stone and his famed wing this afternoon fixed Colorado College as the abiding place for another year of that bit of bunting, generally known as the State Collegiate Baseball championship pennant.

Some time ago the University of Colorado ball nine triumphed over the Colorado College and it was imperative that the Springs gang win today in order to salt away the coveted rag. The aforesaid Christy Mathewson Van Stone proved to be an adept at the job of salting and the final score was: Tigers, 10; Boulder, 0.

Only twice did the Silver and Gold batters find Mister Van for safeties, and those came in the last four innings. Up to the sixth he pitched hitless balls and the scorers grew weary of counting strikeouts.

Van started out a trifle easy, walking two men in the first inning, but it developed later that his intentions were all right for the Boulderites were retired without a tally.

The Tigers got dangerous in the fourth and four of them scampered over the pan. In the fifth the hard-hitting Jimmie Wilson accepted a pass and was pushed off first for a score by Van Stone's triple. The fielding feature of the inning was Sinton's daring catch of a high liner over first.

In the fifth Boulder began going to pieces, and after that they never had a look in for Van Stone and his pals had the seance all tied up and ready to express to Colorado Springs. At no time during the game were the visitors in danger.

Terrors Fall Victim of Hoodoo for Third Time and Lose State Championship to Boulder Preps.

Special to The Gazette.

BOULDER, June 4.—For the third successive year the Colorado Springs High School Terrors today fell victims of the terrible hoodoo which seems to pursue them whenever they go after a state baseball championship. Inability to clout the ball at critical stages lost the game to the Boulder Preps, 1 to 3.

After the fifth inning, Hyatt of the Terrors was invincible and only 19 men faced him. He struck out eight during the game and played magnificent ball throughout. Ley, the Preps' star twirler, was disqualified and could not play. Carver, who took his place, was effective.

The feature of the game was Carver's homer in the second. Falling on one of Hyatt's slants, he drove the ball to deep right field. Kippe made a desperate effort to stop the drive, but the ball bounded from his glove and went over the fence.

The Terrors made their lone score in the third when Barnes went to first on an error and was scored by Hyatt's two-bagger. Hyatt managed to score on the throw but was called out for failing to touch third.

This is the third season that the Terrors have won the southern division championship, only to be bested by the champion of the northern division. The visitors played a good fielding game generally yesterday and would have won had they batted in pinches as they have been doing through the season.

BUGS RAYMOND HAS BIG LEAD OVER THE RUBE IN RACE FOR DOUBTFUL DISTINCTION

By C. E. Van Loan.

NEW YORK, June 4.—In the race for distinction as the most erratic, eccentric and daffy pitcher in the big leagues, Bugs Raymond is leading by an elbow over our old friend G. Edward Waddell, known to fame and a portion of Missouri as the Rube. The battle between G. Edward and the Bug has been a close one. For many moons Waddell held the belt for eccentricity. If he had not been a wonderful baseball player, he would have been chucked to the minors years ago, but pitchers like Waddell are so rare that they must be preserved to the game.

We all remember the sorrows of Oscar Hammerstein and the many tribulations forced upon him by his singers, particularly the women. A woman with a wonderful voice can get away with anything short of murder in the first degree by blaming it upon her artistic temperament, which is an ornamental name for plain unadorned meanness, selfishness and petty spite. If a soprano got jealous of another woman and tore up her contract, refused to sing her roles and played smash generally, she could blame it upon her artistic temperament and all was forgiven. What a shame the Rube never heard about that artistic temperament thing. It would have been such a handy alibi for him.

Waddell stuck in the limelight by virtue of his ability to throw a ball like a streak of lightning and throw it twice or three times in the same place, viz, over the Goodyear. In between his marvelous performances the Rube established himself as a bartender, a side show barker, an actor, a sidewalk commedien, a rough and tumble battler and a very competent vessel for mixed liquors. He enjoyed the proud eminence of supreme bug of the major leagues and everything was lovely until Bugs Raymond happened along. Bugs went the Rube one better. Waddell in his palmiest days never had a special keeper engaged by the management to take him gently but firmly by the elbow and steer him away from temptation.

You never heard of a chorus girl with an overdose of the artistic temperament. A chorus lady who develops tantrums is fired immediately. You never heard of an eccentric ball player who was not a good one, a bad player would be sent back to herd the cows and cear the potatoes out of the ground with a hoe.

Rube and the Bug are good players. Raymond almost drove McGraw to despair last season, for the chubby manager realized what an excellent pitcher Bugs really was and tried to save him for the hard finish of the season. McGraw even went so far as to try physical persuasion upon his big, but erratic sousepaw upon the ground that a swift wallop on the nose is sometime better than a ream of argument. McGraw tried to keep money out of Raymond's hands, figuring that if he never had a cent he would be forced to keep his nose dry. No use. Bugs had too many friends. His admirers were always ready to purchase even if Bugs had to look up in the air when it came his turn to deliver orders to the gent in the apron.

"Turn him lose on a desert isle," said one of the players, referring to Raymond, "and inside of an hour he will turn up with a flask on his hip. How he does it, I don't know. I guess he just charms that liquor."

Unfortunately George Edward must retire from the competition. Boston is his hoodoo town. By reason of matrimonial troubles Rube was forced to cut Boston off the pitching list and just as the clouds cleared away, bing! on the elbow with a red hot liner, and out goes the Rube with a broken bone. At the end of last season nobody believed that McGraw would make another effort to reform the thirsty Raymond. It was though that in spite of the fact that Bugs won 600 per cent of his games, he would get the gate but McGraw decided to try it again on the ground that a pitcher of Raymond's class is worth saving at any cost. McGraw is willing to gamble. Should he fail to straighten out the big spitballist everybody will say "I told you there wasn't any use." On the other hand, should the private keeper keep Bugs away from the disturbance water and his pitching be up to his usual standard, everyone will say that McGraw showed excellent judgment in hanging on to his sousepaw through thick and thin.

An erratic pitcher is a hard strain on a team. The men behind him never know when he is going to blow up and they are kept on a strain whenever the eccentric one works. When Bugs goes into the box in good condition, his head clear and his muscles hardened by work, he pitches good enough baseball for any man's club. His keeper has been steering him away from the gin mills for some time. touch wood everybody and at last accounts McGraw was hopeful that the problem had been solved. They say the ever-loving Rube is consumed with jealousy because Bugs has a keeper. A man with a broken wing doesn't really need a keeper.

"NO AUTOMOBILE, NO FIGHT," SAID TO HAVE BEEN VERDICT OF BILL DELANEY

By W. W. Naughton

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4.—This talk of Billy Delaney having to do with the Jack Johnson end of the big fight of July 4 arouses memories even if it ends in smoke. So far as the trainers of the old school are concerned Billy is about the last of the Mohicans, but his word is law now as it was in the years gone by. Anbody wishing to settle an argument in regard to an old time fight or on a matter of training will be quite content to leave the question to Billy Delaney. Some of our silvery-haired fight fans thing they are dabbling in ancient history when they tell what they remember of the days of John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan. Delaney can talk about Jem Mace, Dooney Harris, Tommy Chandler, Joe Gans and Bill Clark, and still look young.

Some men think twice before answering a question. Delaney things a half dozen times before he speaks, and then measures his words with nicety. I asked him point blank the other day who he thought would be the better trained man, Jim Jeffries or Jack Johnson. After a silence that was absolutely embarrassing Delaney replied: "I don't see what is to prevent either of them being at his best. If, however, you can tell me which of them has the greater confidence, I may tell you which of them is likely to have the bulge on condition."

This was turning the tables with notable adroitness and all I could say was that I could see no lack of confidence in either camp. Then Delaney proceeded to enlarge upon his point that confidence is far and away the best aid to condition.

"When a man is really and truly confident his mind is not filled with forebodings," said the old trainer. "You know they say that worry once killed a cat and it certainly has killed off the chances of many a promising fighter. The next best thing to being confident is to be frank in your confessions that you are not confident. In my time I have had more than one man say to me 'I am kinder doubtful of my chances with this fellow I am going against,' and I was glad to have them come out with it. When a man confides in his trainer there is a chance of your being able to reassure him, or at any rate, jolly him into a frame of mind where his doubts are considerably lessened. The hard man to do anything for is the fellow who lacks confidence and makes a secret of the fact. It burns him up.

The foregoing was uttered in an reflective strain, but Delaney refused to admit that he considered either Jeffries or Johnson looking in self-reliance. His remarks, he said, were merely made in a general way.

"Having a hobby of some kind is a wonderful benefit to a man when he is going through the grind of training," added Delaney. "Take Johnson for instance. It may be that there is a certain element of danger in his fascination for automobiling, but barring accident, the possession of a buzz wagon will have more to do with landing him in the ring in grand fix and free from care than all the work he does and all the companions he has around him. If you were to take the automobile away from him I believe the fight would fall through, even though he might at first agree to part with his plaything. He would not be able to find anything to replace it as a medium for keeping his thoughts off the fight. He is so fond of it, in fact, that it would be a shame to deprive him of it. It would be like taking a doll from a child."

Although Delaney, who is usually cautious, would not admit it there is reason for believing that Tex Richard urged him to see what he could do towards making Johnson abandon his automobile rides until after July 4.

Delaney's report—that is if he had a report to make—about settled the question, however. It was practically, "no automobile, no fight."

SPRINGS GOLF CLUB OPENS TENNIS COURTS

The two new tennis courts at the Colorado Springs Golf club were opened yesterday afternoon and several lively matches resulted. All the players pronounced the courts in fine condition. The courts are of gravel and will be the scene of numerous club tournaments this summer. The golf links also were crowded yesterday and the club had the appearance of a holiday, so great was the attendance.

Crippled by the absence of Hastings their pitcher the Gas Company ball players yesterday afternoon lost to the Portland mill nine 3 to 12.

ZOOZ TAKE ON DENVER COTTRELLS HERE TODAY

The Zooz will take on the Denver Cottrells at Zoo park this afternoon at 3 o'clock in what should be one of the most interesting games played this season. The Denverites have a strong batting order and their pitching staff is far above the average.

Captain Merz will be on the rubber for the locals, with Ollis behind the bat. Fogler will play at first, with Mellicker at second, Vernon at short and Counts at third. In the field will be Wilson, Dixon and Gail.

Since their defeat at the hands of the Topeka Western league club, the Zooz have been putting in some hard licks getting into better shape and as the season progresses they are expected to show better team work. The diamond will be fast this afternoon.

NEGRO SAYS ODDS NOT FAIR

Johnson Claims Fight Should Be Even Wager.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4.—"What do you think the odds will be when betting begins in earnest in your fight with Jeff?" was asked of Jack Johnson, the other day.

"About 10 to 7 with Jeff favorite," was the reply.

"Do you think that a fair price?" was the next question.

"It's very liberal," he answered with a grin. "I think if there ever was an even money proposition from a betting standpoint this fight is it. Why should there be any odds either way? Each of us is in the prime of life and there is only a couple of years difference in our ages. Jeffries knows the boxing game from A to Z and there is no doubt he will be in first-class condition. I am at least as clever as he is, almost as big and just as well trained. I don't see that there is much to swing a betting man one way or the other, but of course, if you ask me, I think I am going to win."

At the present time there is complaint among the men who fancy Jeff that they are unable to make any investments, even though they have offered 10 to 6 against the negro. Johnson says this is because a few well-to-do supporters of the white man think it advisable to get in on the ground floor of the betting, for fear the price may be worse later on. Johnson thinks that when a good system of betting is inaugurated, and the small betters know where they can get action for their money, the Johnson men who can find a means of speculating at 6 to 10 will simply be lucky.

Although Jack imagines that the sentiment in favor of Jeff which is sure to be in evidence will be sufficient to keep Jeff on top at 10 to 7 he says he will not be surprised if a common-sense view of the fight will have the effect of bringing about even money on the eve of the battle.

Jack Johnson says that a rich young Montanan named Charles Clark will be one of his principal supporters, and that Clark has already signified his intention of wagering on Johnson's chances to the extent of $25,000.

Whatever the critics may think about it, there is considerable satisfaction among Jeff's handlers over the fact that the big fellow is diversifying the grind of training with fishing excursions and automobile trips to Santa Cruz. One has only of look at Jeff to know that he has labored faithfully to strip himself of overweight. While doing so he has placed his lungs in good working order, and a little relaxation at this spell of the game is undeniably a good thing for him.

According to Manager Sam Berger, the outdoor ring which is being erected at Camp Rowardennan will be in place in a few days. By that time the hostelry in the Santa Cruz mountains will house quite a crowd of visitors daily, and Jim's daily bouts with Jim Corbett, Bob Armstrong and Choynski will be the principal attraction of each day's work.

Bates had a two-bagger and a triple, being responsible for the victory of the local team. Willis, who succeeded Harmon in the sixth, had the Phillies at his mercy, the one run scored off him resulting from an error. Score R.H.E.

The Gazette-Herald's Tour to California Contest Came to a Close at 10 o'Clock Last Night

Hundreds of thousands of votes were cast by the candidates and their friends. Much interest manifested among Gazette-Herald patrons all over Colorado.

The Winners Will Be Announced Next Tuesday or Wednesday

Fifteen energetic ladies have won a three weeks' trip to California in which the Gazette-Herald pays all expenses. The winners will leave Colorado Springs for California next Saturday, June 11, accompanied by their chaperons. Watch for the announcement of the winners in The Gazette and Herald next Tuesday or Wednesday.

The Gazette and Herald tour to California contest closed last night at 10 o'clock amid a perfect flurry of votes.

The contest department will begin today counting, checking and rechecking the hundreds of thousands of votes that were cast yesterday and last night by the candidates and their friends. All of the mail from the outside districts will not be in before Monday afternoon, but as soon as received every effort will be made to conclude the counting of the votes as rapidly as possible and make the announcement of winners soon afterward.

The winning ladies with the votes they have will be named in The Herald and Gazette Tuesday or Wednesday of this week.

The closing hours of the contest brought forth the fact that more interest has prevailed than was evident even during the exciting moments previous to June 4, when the end of each week brought the candidates in with their subscriptions and coupons by the score. It was an exciting scene, which visitors in the contest department witnessed last night. Anxious faces of candidates and the confident expression on the faces of friends were numerous. Everybody seemed to be turning in subscriptions and it kept the contest editor "on the jump" waiting upon all of them. There was a decided evidence of satisfaction, with the way the great race had progressed in every particular.

Naturally there are going to be disappointments among some of the candidates when the announcement of the winners is made, for everybody cannot win, but she who has fought and failed, will have the satisfying knowledge that she made someone else "go some" too.

This contest has been one of the most successful ones ever conducted by any newspaper in Colorado. The prizes are to be a trip to California and The Gazette and Herald pays all expenses. There will be fifteen winners and they will start on their delightful tour next Saturday, June 11, accompanied by a representative of The Gazette and Herald and his wife who will personally chaperon the party.

MANY NOTED SPEAKERS AT COMING MEETING

Founders of Movement to Address Christian Endeavor Convention at Sterling.

The coming convention of Christian Endeavorers at Sterling, June 16-19, inclusive, promises to be one of the most notable gatherings of Christian young people that has been held in northeastern Colorado in many years.

The Christian Endeavor movement was inaugurated some thirty years ago by the Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., pastor at that time of the Williston Congregational church of Portland, Me., and today there are over 70,000 societies and some four millions of members of this organization in all parts of the civilized world.

The program committee announces that the founder of the movement, Dr. Clark, of Boston, will address the convention. Speakers of state and national importance will also be there. Karl Lehmann, formerly field secretary of Christian Endeavor for Colorado, and now interstate field secretary of Christian Endeavor with headquarters at Boston, will speak. Other speakers are: Guy M. Withers of Kansas City, editor of The Endeavorer; the Rev. Joel Harper, pastor of the City Park Congregational church, Denver; the Rev. William H. Hopkins, superintendent for Colorado of the Congregational Home Missionary society, and Judge Ben B. Lindsay, of the juvenile court, Denver.

The railroads have granted a rate of a fare and a fifth from all mountain points, and a rate of a fare and a third from all plain points, on the certificate plan. A large number of delegates is expected from all parts of the state.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS WILL HAVE GREAT TIMES

Annual Gypsy Trip and Other Attractions On—Many Inducements Given.

The boys of the Y. M. C. A. are to have great times this summer, judging by the plans and preparations that are being made. The boys' department has in hand at present its annual gypsy trip for members. This trip will be held from June 13 to 23, and will cover the territory in the neighborhood of Woodland park. The expenses of the trip will be but $7 and will, besides being a great physical help, be a bright spot in every boy's memory. Competent men will be in charge so that no danger need be feared.

Besides this, tennis courts are being prepared exclusively for the use of the boys. The swimming pool will be opened to them four times a week under the supervision of a competent swimming instructor, and anything else a boy can want during vacation time the association seems to stand ready to supply.

W. D. Thomas, boys secretary, announces a special summer rate of $2, and also a special membership to be given on the payment of $1 for one month, entitling holder to join the gypsy trip.

EIGHT-YEAR OLD LAD WINS FAME BY A LETTER TO COLONEL ROOSEVELT

Roller Skating Fad Due to Texan Painter of American Women Feted--Singers Change Names Americans Aid Charity.

By MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.

PARIS, June 4.—The Intransigant newspaper publishes a curious letter addressed to Colonel Roosevelt by a little boy 8 years old named Roland McDonald. The lad whose father is an English writer has been brought up in Paris. Hence his letter is written in French. He accuses the famous huntsman of needless cruelty. I extract a few sentences:

"Your friends and yourself are the cruelest people I know. It is a horrible thing to kill zebras, giraffes, buffaloes, antilopes, lions and tigers. I am glad you missed three or four wild boars. I know these things because I have read your articles in the magazines. I can read English, but I can write only French. Please write and tell me what you really think of people who slaughter wild animals for amusement?"

That guileless letter has created somewhat of a sensation. Animal lovers in all parts of France are expressing their approval of the 8-year-old's protest.

TEXAN TAKES A HIT.

No little of the success of roller-skating in Parisian and Roman society is due to O. K. King of Fort Worth, Texas, son of former governor of that state. King, who is young and athletic, found himself stranded in Paris and took a place as instructor at the fashionable skating rink in the Place Victor Hugo. Ladies of distinction insisted upon being taught by him and no other. When he refused their "tips" they decided he was quite out of the ordinary and gave him presents of scarf-pins, rings and handkerchiefs. Of scarf-pins alone he has over one hundred.

He went to Bourne and was equally successful as rink instructor. Among those who took lessons from the Texan were Queen Helena, Miss Nancy Leishman and Countess Gontaut-Biron, the daughters of the American ambassador, and Miss Gwendoline Stary, the daughter of the sculptor.

A PAINTER LIONIZED.

Since his return from the United States Francois Flameng, the famous painter of fair women, has been feted and flattered by his compatriots. Especially they have congratulated him upon having painted the portraits of 15 of New York's most beautiful women. Some of his sitters were so pleased with their likenesses that they insisted upon being painted twice.

Among the well known New Yorkers Flameng painted during his four months' stay in America are Mrs. Whitney Warren, Miss C. Pearce, Mrs. J. B. Duke, Miss Duke, Miss Densimore, Mrs. Carstairs, Mrs. George Widener and the Misses Sherman.

Francois Flameng has taken a studio in New York and needless to say will return next winter.

SINGERS' SILLY FAD.

A curious fashion is springing up among American singers of changing their family names and softening them down into imitation Italian. Nevada, Nordica and Melba are probably responsible for the fashion, which the younger generation has adopted. Thus Miss Elizabeth Parkinson of Kansas City calls herself Parkina; Miss May McEvilly of Helena is Madame Montana; Miss Esther Col of Portland, Oregon, is Colana; the former Mrs. Charles H. Becker, who used to sing at our opera, was always announced as Miss Jane Noria.

It seems to me they would do quite as well of they clung to their good old American names, as Mary Garden, Geraldine Farrar and Minnie Tracey have done.

AMERICANS AID CHARITY.

It takes Americans to make striking combinations.

Just now the Americans of Paris are combining charity, art and slender waists for the benefit of Trinity lodge, a philanthropic institution which has an art department, a hospital, a library, a restaurant, and an information bureau. Although Trinity lodge is in the heart of the Latin quarters it is conducted in connection with the American church of which Dr. John Morgan, a cousin of J. Pierpont Morgan, has been the pastor for the last 33 years.

Andre' de Fouquieres, the king of the French dandies, is coaching American girls with slender figures how to pose gracefully in living pictures, all for the benefit of Dr. Morgan's Trinity lodge. He is assisted by a jury composed of Julian Stary, Alexandre Farrison, Walter Gay, Julies Stewart and the venerable Augustus Eddy of Chicago, all of them famous painters.

Major F. Bentley Mott, the American military attache and Viscount Chambrun, the brother-in-law of Mrs. Bellamy Storer, are the thin-waisted men who will pose as Washington and Rochambeau, in the tableau representing the surrender of Yorktown.

Mrs. Baxter Tevis McKee will appear in another living picture as the ex-Empress Eugenie at the zenith of her beauty. A number of young girls will figure as her ladies of the court. Mrs. John Warden, of Philadelphia will pose as Carmencita, after Sargent's brilliant portrait in the Luxemburg gallery. Mme. Fenri Gervex will represent France, after the picture "France and America," which her husband recently painted for Baltimore. Other roles are yet to be given out, and Andre' de Fourkuieres is besieged by thin waisted ladies anxious to pose for Trinity lodge and charity.

WINE 1,500 YEARS OLD IS DISCOVERED

PARIS, June 4.—Wine of a Fifth century vintage was exhibited by Professor Julian at a meeting of one of the learned societies here. This ultra-matured wine, 1500 years in bottle, was discovered in the Gallo-Roman cemetery of Saint Seurim, near Bordeaux, where excavations have been going on. Its antiquity was judged by the shape of the bottle as well as by the place of its discovery. It is not recorded whether anyone has had the temerity to taste the ancient beverage.

DEAD MAN, MUCH ALIVE, WORRIES FRENCH POLICE

Red Tape Means That Convict May Legally Commit Even Murder.

PARIS, June 4 The Marseilles police are puzzled at a curious mixup which they are trying to solve in the face of the rigid red-tape. Joseph Edel, a convict returned from one of the penal settlements, died in a hospital in the southern city. A few weeks later, the police arrested Joseph Edel in the main street of Marseilles. The man who had died in the hospital had escaped from the convict settlement, having stolen Joseph Edel's papers.

The police are now in a quandary. Joseph Edel has been arrested, and ought to go to prison for returning to a country which does not want him, but legally Joseph Edel is dead and buried, and may commit any crime he likes, including murder, without fear of punishment, for, being dead, he is beyond the reach of the law.

The police are now trying to have the death certificate altered but this will be a lengthy process, and meanwhile they will be obliged to treat the "dead" prisoner, the most [illegible] at liberty

Latest photograph of King Manuel of Portugal, who has gained the name of "Europe's handsomest ruler." Despite his youth, however, the young monarch's trim and well-knit figure is daily becoming broader, and if he escapes the assassin's bomb, he will be a counterpart of his father in a few years. His increased bulk was very noticeable at the funeral of the late King Edward VII, when he was mounted on horseback near the head of the procession.

TOBACCO SLAVES OF FRANCE FORM UNION OF DEFENSE AGAINST TAXATION OF WEED

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

(Special Cable From the International News Service.)

PARIS, June 4.—Smokers are not taking kindly to the increased prices of tobacco. There is a National League for the Defense of Smokers, and it has started a campaign with a view to inducing M. Cochery, the minister of finance, to lower the prices of tobacco and cigarettes. The secretary of the league declares that smokers furnish $16,000,000, or a tenth of the budget, to the state annually and are not disposed to tolerate the new duties. At a meeting of the league the idea of a strike was discouraged, but smokers were urged to buy the tobacco and the cigarettes which were not surtaxed. One speaker put this question: "If on every occasion there is a budget deficit the consumers of tobacco, sugar, alcohol, etc., are attacked, how will it end? We must put a stop to it," he added. "If the state sets itself up as a manufacturer and trader, let it be honest first of all."

Another speaker suggested that meetings of protest should be held with the idea of rousing public opinion. He cited the cases of the wine growers and the licensed victuallers. The finance minister wanted to put fresh burdens upon them, but the monster demonstration of protest they held at the Trocadero was too much for him. They bowled him over. Why cannot smokers do the same? it is asked.

The League for the Defense of Smokers was only in existence 48 hours when it obtained 2,000 members. The annual subscription is modest—only 2½d. a year. Another meeting of protest is to be held on Wednesday, and in a fortnight a monster demonstration will be organized. It will receive the support of all classes, and will probably be followed by a manifestation.

Many smokers laid in stores of tobacco and cigarettes before the new prices came into operation. The result was that the tobacco shops did very little trade yesterday. It is doubtful whether the minister of finance will receive as much money as he expects from his new taxes. Indeed, it would not be surprising if his experience proved to be the same as fell to the lot of Mr. Lloyd-George when he took it into his head to increase the whisky tax. It is almost safe to say that less tobacco will be consumed in France.

TRAVELING BOOKSHOPS ENGLISH INNOVATION

LONDON, June 4.—Traveling bookshops are a new development in the literary trade. Automobiles stacked with new productions are to scour the country districts where bookshops are few and far between. The cars, which are specially constructed for rapid conversion into shops, will number three and cost about $3,000 each. A chauffeur, a salesman and a porter will travel with each car, and the peripatetic book stores will be sent northeast, northwest and west from London, respectively.

ZEPPELIN TYPE OF AIRSHIP HAS HAD ITS DAY IS NOW BELIEF IN GERMANY

Count, Lately Called by Kaiser "Most Distinguished German of Twentieth Century" May Lose Favor of His Royal Patron

By STEVEN BURNETT.

BERLIN, June 4.—Poor Count Zeppelin! It looks as though he were destined to suffer the lot of almost all original inventors—supersession—and as though, moreover, he were in danger of losing the countenance of the man who dubbed him "the most distinguished German of the twentieth century."

At a dinner given by Prince Schonaich-Carolath a few evenings ago, the count openly complained that the cause of the disaster to his balloon at Weinberg had been grievously misrepresented by the military authorities and, worse than that, that when talking to him at a reception the chancellor never once alluded to the disaster, much less offered his sympathy on account of it.

The count maintained that if the balloon had been properly anchored it would not have been blown away, and that if its military crew had remained "aboard" as they ought to have, it could have been easily conducted to a place of security. The worst of the matter is the impression is now pretty strong in Germany, that the rigid Zeppelin type of airship has had its day and will sooner or later be displaced by the non-rigid Parseval or semi-rigid Gross.

But whatever happens Count Zeppelin can be sure of one thing. Though the proofs have not yet been passed, his name is already written beside that of Montgolfier in the pages of history.

A New War Terror?

The Krupps of Essen have circulated a private and confidential offer to well-known scientific experts for an invention which will project electrical energy to a distance. The basic idea is to direct powerful electrical currents into the gas bag of balloons and explode them; also to direct this current into the magazines of warships.

Many brains are concentrated on this problem, and experts believe it will be the next development of warfare. Success would mean the destruction at one stroke of the world's aerial and marine dreadnoughts.

Fighting Standard Oil.

The Australian government is steadily pursuing its studies for monopolizing the petroleum industry of the country. Difficulties technical and commercial, and parliamentary—stand in the way of realizing the project. As far as can be judged at present the proposal will be for a state monopoly of production, not of sale. The refineries would get their quota of petroleum, the total sufficient to supply the entire home demand. In this way it is hoped to defeat the competition of the Vacuum Oil company—a Standard Oil concern—and to assist the important oil industry of Galicia.

Korean Annexation Soon?

According to information reaching political circles here, the annexation of Korea by Japan will become a fact shortly, if not immediately. The Japanese government will only proclaim the annexation after the commercial treaties expiring on July 1, and of which notice must be given a year previously, have been renewed.

The new treaties will contain the words "Japan, including the province of Korea." Negotiations connected with this change have already been begun with the powers. The importance of the event is seen in authoritative quarters from the circumstance that it is accomplished without Russian opposition, and even, apparently, in agreement with that government, as at the same time an understanding upon the differences between the two powers will be reached.

The friendly relations of England with Russia, and her alliance with Japan, have doubtless assisted the Russo-Japanese rapprochement. The English cabinet had a great interest in mediating between its friend and its ally, and, as before this the Franco-Japanese treaty was negotiated, a bond which united the four powers is now in existence.

WITCHCRAFT FIGURES IN GERMAN LAWSUIT

Woman Accused of Hiring "Witch" to Help Kill Husband by Sorcery.

BERLIN, June 4 Witchcraft and incantations form the subject of a lawsuit being heard in the grand duchy of Baden.

Frau Vynocsi, wife of a local landowner, accuses her sister-in-law, Frau Berber, of writing anonymous letters charging her with trying to bring about the death of her husband by spells and incantations.

Frau Berber seeks to justify the accusation and in defense declares that a woman named Grein, who recently fled to America, played the part of a witch. Frau Grein, she alleges, promised to get rid of Herr Vynocsi if the latter's wife assisted her once a week for three months and repeated a certain mystic formula, while the "witch" danced around a cauldron. The "witch," says Frau Berber, was paid two dollars a visit.

The plaintiff denies the whole story, and declares that she visited the "wise woman" for her own health.

WHAT IS REASON FOR INCREASING SUICIDE?

ITALIAN PRELATE SAYS THERE ARE THREE CAUSES.

Spirit of Irreligion Principally Responsible Final Analysis of Vexing Problem.

MILAN, June 4.—Bishop Bonomelli, of Cremona, a well known veteran Liberal prelate, publishes a remarkable personal letter regarding the alarming growth of suicide in Italy, which has swollen from 836 cases in the year 1871 to 2,686 suicides in 1908, in which year the number of female cases stood at 619 as against 152 in 1871.

The bishop, after noting that suicide and homicide are usually found to develop on lines of inverse ratio, maintains that all the varied suicidal causes enumerated by science are really reducible to three, namely, wounded pride, deluded avarice and real or imaginary love betrayals.

Then how explain, asks the illustrious churchman, that though these three passions have tormented mankind throughout the centuries, the suicide mania in its never-ceasing advance is a peculiar mark of our time? Bishop Bonomelli recognizes that the new social conditions created by material progress are largely responsible but insists that the main cause is the spirit of irreligion which stalks abroad, flaunting a romantic literature that glorifies the act of self-murder, a melodrama that culminates in a grand coup, generally of dual suicide, and, so planned as to bid for the sympathy of the audience, and finally a yellow press that by giving undue prominence to its suicide chronicle disposes its readers either to regard the phenomenon as commonplace or else as so uncommon as not to call for censure.

Monsignor Bonomelli is firmly persuaded as the outcome of over 50 years episcopal experience that it is a stern, regrettable necessity from a Christian and social point of view to maintain a clear distinction by withholding solemn funerals in the case of persons who voluntarily take their own lives.

UNUSUAL FUNERAL IN COUNTY OF TIPPERARY

MEN EXECUTED 40 YEARS AGO PUBLICLY MOURNED.

10,000 People Join in Tribute to Men Believed Innocent of Murder Charge.

LONDON, June 4.—After a lapse of 50 years, the funeral of the brothers named McCormack was only recently held at Nenagh Co., Tipperary. Seldom have so many people taken part in a funeral procession as attended the interment of the two brothers. It was estimated that over 10,000 people were present.

The McCormacks were hanged 50 years ago, after having been convicted of the murder of a man named Ellis; but the people of the locality were convinced that the men were innocent of the crime. When, therefore, the old goal was disposed of recently, in order to be transformed into convent grounds, the suggestion was made that the remains of the McCormacks should be disinterred and accorded a public funeral.

This was done, the manifestation of public sorrow being intensified by the fact that most of those present showed traces of grief at the death of King Edward.

A requiem mass was first celebrated in the Roman Catholic church, after which the procession started for the graveyard, where the interment was place. Banners were placed at intervals along the line of route, bearing such legends as "Innocent, Not Guilty," and "Innocence Rewarded." All the shops in the town were closed. Many clergymen headed the procession, and, following them, came school children, wearing black and green rosettes.

The two hearses, each drawn by four horses, were followed by 600 vehicles, interspersed among which were bands, the draped instruments and muffled drums playing funeral music. Another religious ceremony was performed at the graveside before the coffins were lowered to their resting-place in consecrated ground.

QUEEN MARY IS AN ACCOMPLISHED ARTIST

LONDON, June 4.—Queen Mary, consort of King George V, is an accomplished artist. One of her paintings was exposed for sale at a charity fair at Hull—a small watercolor, entitled "On the Marches at Snottisham, Near the Queen's Bungalow," the "bungalow" being Queen Alexandra's retreat on the Norfolk coast near Sandringham. The picture, which is a fine broad treatment of landscape and clouds, will probably be acquired by the Hull municipal gallery. The special interest of it rests in the fact that it was sent from London when the royal artist was Princess of Wales, and reached Hull after she had become queen.

13-YEAR OLD BANDIT GETS 10-YEAR TERM

VIENNA, June 4.—A "bandit chief" aged 13 years, is languishing in a Hungarian reformatory, serving a 10 years' sentence. With his band of 10 young desperadoes, he was captured by the police at Sopron, after a career of pillage and rapine which lasted three months. These bad boys, some of whom were children of eight, had their lair in a large cave, and had 123 robberies and one murder laid to their charge. Loot valued at $25,000 was discovered in the cave. Before he was captured, the young chieftain shot a policeman, seriously wounding him.

HUNGARIAN NOVELIST REWARDED BY STATE

VIENNA, June 4.—Kalman Mikszath, the famous Hungarian novelist, has received from the nation a handsome and substantial token of appreciation. To mark his fiftieth birthday, he has been presented with three estates, worth $25,000, so that in his old age he will not be dependent on the product of his pen for subsistence. Ex-President Roosevelt, during his visit to Budapest, met Mikszath, and in a long interview told him that his works were widely read in America. Mr. Roosevelt added that the last book he read, before leaving home, was "St. Peter's Umbrella," which has been translated into English.

HEALING HUMAN ILLS BY MEANS OF WIRELESS

BERLIN, June 4.—Healing by wireless current is the latest scientific idea. An apparatus has been devised by a Berlin firm of electricians, who claim that by its agency the Hertzian waves may be passed through the human body with curative effect. The inventors say that it will give relief to internal disease when applied to the organ affected, and that there are no detrimental effects. The current will also produce sterilization in the part through which it is directed and thus prevent blood poisoning.

The funeral cortege of King Edward turning into the Palace Yard at Westminster, the route guarded by lines of picked troops. Practically the entire distance from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Hall was walled with soldiers as shown here during the removal of King Edward's body from the palace to the hall where it lay in state. This is the first picture published in this country of the cortege.

Behind the Footlights

Mrs. Fiske and Theodore Roosevelt

The following article by Mrs Fiske recently appeared in the Boston Herald

A rather brusque and plain spoken correspondent writes that ex-President Roosevelt is just now returning from an exhibition that is a disgrace to civilization

It has been suggested I believe that some sort of public protest be made in this connection this protest to be signed by thousands of names, and to bear tangible witness to the fact that thousands of American men and women do not regard Mr Roosevelt as the best example of representative American manhood, enlightenment or progressiveness A distinguished man has recently said, I doubt whether there is an active anticruelist in this country who would be unwilling to sign such a protest

The most serious blow dealt the humanitarian movement in modern times is the blow it has received at the hands of ex-President Roosevelt Men and women the world over who most appreciate the better qualities of our ex chief executive can not sympathize with nor admire his African exploit, and its approval by a magazine of unimpeachable respectability

Thousands of American boys desire to emulate the President How is it possible to measure the mischievous effect of the jungle enterprise upon reckless and often naturally cruel youth Small bravery is required in the killing of wild animals and no atom of nobility

In the matter of the destruction of animal life it may be that the attitude of the butcher is nobler than the attitude of the hunter One may at least say in defense of the butcher that he is indifferent The hunter owns to a thrill of rapture as his bullet pierces the heart of the bird or his knife tears the throat of the frightened doe.

If the humanitarian idea is progressive and right, then the ex-President's act is unprogressive and the reverse is right The question arises, how far should a man of great celebrity feel it incumbent upon himself to restrain any public exhibition of a natural instinct, when such exhibition implies danger as a menace to ethics accepted and taught by many enlightened and worthy persons?

We all know the status in the calendar of crime of the destruction of life. How far are we sure that we have a moral right to destroy animal life, since man no longer denies the fact that all life emanates from the same life principle, and that all living things belong to a universal kinship? We all know that dangerous animals must be destroyed when they menace the safety of man, but in this destruction there should be an economy of cruelty To consider the destruction of life as a pleasureable sport is hardly in harmony with progressive thought of any sort As Frederic Harrison has written The death and pain inflicted should accord with the necessities of civilization, and to the ultimate protection of the vanguard of the animal world as a whole, of which man is only the guardian. Above all else, those who inflict suffering and death upon the animal world should search their own soul faithfully, and be sure that there lurk therein no trace of enjoyment in the infliction; no brutal insensibility of our action; no wanton curiosity, no diabolical passion of vanity or ambition." And it is proper to ask if Theodore Roosevelt was moved by any of these impulses and emotions in his death-giving course through the African jungle?

Many hunters would have us believe that hunting possesses a noble and uplifting aspect Some even protest that the killing of game is the lesser part of the huntsman's pleasure in the 'sport.' Hunters would have us believe that the passionate love of nature is the lure that bids them take up gun and rod and depart into the wilderness As a matter of fact, the greatest lovers of nature have not been hunters May I be permitted to quote what one of these lovers of nature has written? "Go out, my brother, to the wilderness—out to the virgin loveliness of untouched nature, where sodden man has not yet littered the wilds with his 'improvements', loiter among winding streams and watch the shadows sleeping in quivering pools, and the water birds splashing up and sailing away out of sight see the blossoms opening their bright petals to the sun and pouring out their sweetness into the radiant air (the cowslip, the violet, the wild rose, and all that darling array that makes Nature so incomparably fair in the spring), listen to the bees on the sweet-scented willows, the tinkle of distant bells, the love song of the catbird in the thicket, and the sad, sweet longing of the dove, lie down on the bank in the sun and listen to the low music of the waters and the footsteps of the breeze on the treetops, and beyond, through the rifts of drowsy greenery, see the beautiful blue sky, oh, how beautiful and blue, with its silvery fleets sailing silently out of the west'—and then, if you honestly feel like killing something, feel as if you must become the author of an ill-smelling carcass of some kind, go home, my brother, as straightway as you can, and hang yourself by the neck until dead'"

The play is unlike anything else ever put on the stage. It is filled with the breeziest and most delightful dialogue ever, and it presents situations that are truly side-splitting The part of Aunt Mary as portrayed by Miss Robson is a delightful piece of work, and it keeps the audience in a continual roar during the entire performance

As a comedienne Miss Robson is superb. Her exquisite style and poise, her smooth nerve soothing voice, and the rapidity with which she changes from the ludicrous to the emotional, fairly captivates her audience

MRS. FISKE TO BE SEEN HERE

The coming of America's greatest actress, Mrs. Minnie Madern Fiske, to the Opera House June 20, is an event of unusual proportions Mrs. Fiske has not been seen here since she was Minnie Madern, since which time she has risen to the rank of the foremost players of the world

For her local engagement, Ibsen's "Pillars of Society," will probably be used. This is the drama which made such an unusual success in New York this spring, being so successful that the actress could well have remained in that city all summer and next season had she so chosen It is a modern drama vital in theme intense in development and thoroughly interesting Ibsen, the master of all modern dramatists, in this play struck popular fancy as perhaps he has not yet done in any of his other plays Written almost 20 years ago it is just now being appreciated so far ahead of its time was the drama when first given to the world

Supporting Mrs Fiske is the finest company ever sent on the road Holbrook Blinn Fuller Mellish Edward Mackaye Sheldon Lewis Mary Madern and many other notables are included in the support

THEODORE LORCH THIS WEEK

Theodore Lorch, the popular young actor who is to play a long summer season of stock at the Opera House has originally arranged to open his season here Monday evening, June 13 but being rather superstitious he preferred not to begin a long season on the thirteenth of the month so he has arranged with Manager Nye to open his season a few days earlier Friday evening of this week

The opening play is a comedy called The Man Who Does Things This is the first time this play has been offered in this city and it marks the policy of high-class offerings which will be a feature of Lorch's local engagement During the summer Mr Lorch will produce at regular intervals new plays never before offered here alternating with revivals of popular favorites

The Man Who Does Things' tells of Robert Armstrong a civil engineer the mainstay of an important eastern firm Armstrong is engaged to be married and is about to take the final vows when his employer tries to persuade him that a man is a fool to tie himself down when he has as great promises for future success as Armstrong has A lot of comedy pathos, and general excitement is developed out of the manager's attempt to prevent the marriage Mr Lorch has surrounded himself by the best company he ever had for this special engagement, retaining many of the members of his Salt Lake company

GREATEST SHOW EVER BOOKED AT MAJESTIC

For this week opening tomorrow afternoon, Manager Tammen of the Majestic has booked what may be called with confidence one of the greatest if not the greatest show ever engaged at the popular local playhouse One hour and three-quarters of solid entertainment at the very least is what the list calls for and it is safe to say that no such offering was ever presented in any city in the country at such low prices

It is hard to pick out any one act as a headliner for there are several that touch the very pinnacle of vaudeville aspiration There is "Noodles' Fagan, the king of the newsboys, whose unique "talks' are praised everywhere, by press and educators, as virile, magnetic and inspiring He not only has a message for the 'newsies," so dear to his heart because he was and is one of them but to every one in whose veins flows good red blood "Noodles' Fagan is a unique personality he radiates optimism and good cheer and he is always entertaining

Then there are the Three Singing Girls, the daintiest cleverest sweetest trio of misses who ever stepped on a stage One is a soprano one a contralto the third a mezzo-soprano and all three have voices that are seldom heard outside of grand opera There is a great deal of mystery about this trio They answer to certain names but it is whispered that back home they go by different ones Anyhow they are graduates of one of the noted New England conservatories and are not only accomplished singers but [illegible] They are all the rage everywhere they appear They will be here as sure as the sun sets behind Pikes Peak

Then is still another act that is a headliner, Won by Wireless a Japanese comedietta presented by Camille Personi and Jack Halliday It is the daintiest prettiest, best acted little playlet that ever came down the pike The plot is clever the acting perfect the scenic setting and light effects beautiful the atmosphere Japanese It is in short an act of rarest delightful quality

Still another headliner Theodore L Smith, late of Smith and Fuller in what is described as the greatest musical act ever staged Smith is the inventor of the marimbaphone that wonderfully melodious instrument and of many others that produce beautiful music And Smith knows how to bring it out of them He plays a score of instruments with surpassing skill But this is by no means all There is L A Street the great rubber ball manipulator in a unique act that is made the more entertaining by the pantomime of a clever comedian, also Anna B Palmer, the charming young singer, who has been engaged for another week, also the Majestiscope motion pictures and the concert orchestra program All for 10, 20 and 30 cents Can you beat it? Well, hardly

Commencing Monday night June 6, the management will give away $5.00 in real money Talk about anything easy. It's the biggest stunt ever pulled off at a theater and it's no fake Manager Cummings is most enthusiastic over the proposition He won't talk anything else Without a doubt the people will go wild about anything that is so easy as this the saying goes "It's a shame to take the money'

Nobody knows until the picture appears If no one is on hand to claim the first picture the second will be shown If that person is about the next and so on until the five have been shown But we don't look for that to happen If someone tells you next day that 'your picture was shown at the Lyric last night' and you were not there and missed the $5.00 Well' you are not going to let that happen There will be no favorites all will be treated alike in this matter Everybody will have five opportunities each night to get the $5.00, besides seeing the best show in town for ten cents Special programs have been secured for the week, to be changed Monday, Wednesday and Friday as usual

McCourt on Next Season

Peter McCourt, manager of the Broadway theater and Tabor Grand opera house of Denver who has just returned from his annual New York trip says that the theatrical situation is not in as mixed a condition as the newspaper reports would indicate

"The condition of the opposition is just this,' said McCourt last week Several managers controlling one night stand circuits got together elected a president and gave out wild statements that they controlled the theatrical situation They expected all of the big producers to go back 25 years in their methods of doing business, carrying around a date book to their respective offices and booking tours in this way But in this they were sadly disappointed The leading producers said to the one night stand managers We are not going to bring our date books around to you we are going to book our shows in the future as in the past through the offices of Klaw & Erlanger'

"My list of attractions for next season is the best I have had for years continued McCourt Among the combinations that will appear at the Broadway theater I might mention John Drew Mid summe N Seven Days Lost Sight Lillian Russell Maude Adams Henrietta Crosman Ch Spendthrift, Frances Starr The Fortune Hunter Ethel Barrymore Is Matrimony a Failure? MAY RO[illegible]ON AND JACK STORY IN "AUNT MARY."

[illegible] ...ll Present Her Greatest Comedy Success, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," at Opera House Next Week

Eva Tanguay Tells the Story of Her Life to Dorothy Dix

By DOROTHY DIX.

THE one thing more remarkable than the number of people who go to see Eva Tanguay act is the number of people who fight and struggle for the privilege of seeing her leave the theater after a performance. They form a mob about the stage door so that it takes two policemen to force a way through them and get the fascinating little singer and dancer to her automobile.

And these adorers are not stage Johnnies either. They are staid, respectable business men and women and children and school girls, all crazy for a look or a word from the gay little diva who [illegible] her hands at them and smiles and [illegible] out, "God love you," like she meant [illegible].

[illegible] seemed to me that the whole of the audience had emptied itself into the street at the Colonial theater to say a good by to her and it went a long way toward explaining why Eva Tanguay is the best paid woman on the stage, and gets the phenomenal salary of $3,500 a week for less than [illegible] minutes' work a day. She has simply [illegible] the public's number. She has got [illegible] going, and she draws the salary because she draws the people. See?

Miss Tanguay has an apartment overlooking Morningside park, in a quiet house that is full of domestic people, and kiddies, and an atmosphere redolent of boiled mutton, "for," said she, "when I am off the stage, I like to be as far away from it as I can get," and in this pleasant abode she made a heroic effort to analyze for me the psychology of her success and popularity.

Personality, the Whole Secret.

"I think," she said, screwing up her face into an expression of preternatural wisdom, and drawing together her thick eyebrows that can say more than most people's tongues, "I think that the whole secret lies in one word—personality. I don't know what it is. Nobody knows what it is, but whatever it is, I've got it. I have that intangible something about me that makes Eva Tanguay Eva Tanguay and like nobody else in God's world and able to do things in a way that nobody else can do them. And the public happens to like this way.

"That's all there is to it for," she continued, with a frankness that was eminently characteristic, "as a matter of fact I am not beautiful. I cannot sing. I don't know how to dance. I am not even graceful, and yet I am the headliner in vaudeville. I get a salary of $3,500 a week—the biggest that has ever been paid to any woman, except Vesta Victoria, who got it only for a short engagement. While I am going to hold the salary record for a long time to come.

"I am never going to take less, and when the day comes [illegible] vogue and am offered [illegible] quit the stage [illegible] and raise chickens [illegible] course, I'm not going to be a scrub poultry woman either.

"I am getting ready for it, for I've got an 80-acre farm up in Massachusetts with the loveliest trout pond on it you ever saw. But I won't be entirely dependent for a livelihood on catching fish and selling eggs, for I am saving my money, and last year I stuck $1,000 a week away in the bank. Pretty good for a lone, lorn woman, isn't it?"

"Of course," said Miss Tanguay, reverting to the original topic, "success on the stage means giving the public what it likes, and while, in the main, it is [illegible] that that is one of the things that nobody can find out ahead of time, there is one thing certain, and that is that the public likes to be amused.

"People have enough tragedy in their own lives, enough worries and cares without having to be afflicted with the vicarious agonies of the stage. You know very well that it isn't your idea nor mine of spending a happy evening by going to see a play where some terrible problem of life is thrashed out with tears and heart breaks.

"When we pay out our good money for diversion, we want to be diverted, and that's the reason that people flock to see any kind of a comedy or farce that is even half way clever. It also explains the success of vaudeville. It is something gay and lively that makes tired people forget for an hour how jaded they are, and gives them a laugh or two.

"Part of my success I attribute to always keeping this in mind, and always trying to radiate good cheer and get a little happiness across the footlights to the audience. That's why they love me. I stand, in their minds, always for something that is bright and sunshiny.

"And, another thing. I study what people like, and I see that what they adore is youth. It is the young people on the stage that the audience takes into its heart. It is the children, the kiddies, that without any art or perhaps any talent invariably get the applause that shows that they have gripped something that the older and better actors have missed. It is youth that we all long for, and crave, and can never get enough of.

"It is the spirit of youth that I manage to convey to my audience. That, I am sure, is why I make such an appeal to them. When I go on the stage I rollick through my songs and dances. I give them the same impression that they would get if they saw a high-spirited child, bubbling over with laughter, engaged in some madcap prank, playing with all her heart, singing at the top of her voice and enjoying herself with a devil-may-care [illegible] of consequences.

"It is youth, youth, youth silhouetted against the drab canvas of their own weary middle age, and they come to see me again and again because I bring back to them the joy of bygone days that they have lost.

"That's Little Eva's secret of success, and perhaps I shouldn't be able to guess it, except that I have the volatile French temperament. My mother was a French-Canadian and my father a Parisian and my name, Tanguay, should be properly pronounced Tan-yea.

How She Began On the Stage.

"It's funny," continued Miss Tanguay, "that I should have gone back to vaudeville, after having been successful in the legitimate drama, because I began in vaudeville when I was 8 years old. My family had moved to Holyoke, Mass., from Canada, when I was a year old, and my father, who was a physician, died, leaving us desperately poor.

"There was a little vaudeville theater on the street on which I lived that had an amateur night every Friday, and I went down to it and sang a little song about a fisherman being lost at sea, and for it my mother made me a little sailor suit like a boy's, and I wore a rope tied around my waist—heaven knows why—and had my long hair hanging artlessly down my back. But when the amateurs all lined up for the decision of the audience about the best turn, I was awarded the large round silver dollar that was the prize.

"I tell you that dollar meant a lot to us, and so every week I would do something. One time I did a turn in which I wore a costume that my mother made me out of the cover of an umbrella. Then there was some sort of Sunday school celebration in which they needed a queen who could recite and do things without getting stage fright, and I received the prodigious salary of $5 for this, which I have always considered my real first professional engagement.

"Then by and by, my fame spread locally until finally Miss Redding, who was at the head of a Little Lord Fauntleroy company, came along and gave me my first regular engagement. [illegible] at last. [illegible] Fauntleroy and I went [illegible] a pretty brave little [illegible] don't you think? I have done lots of nervy things since then, gone up 1,000 feet high in a balloon for one, but the thing in my whole life that has taken the most courage was when I started out [illegible] without my mother [illegible] money to help support her and my [illegible] sister.

[illegible] and I [illegible] I am [illegible] old now, and I [illegible] a week. [illegible]

What High Prices Cost the Poor

Mothers Must Go to Work, Children Leave School Earlier Than Before, Food Be Cut Down. Such Prices a Menace to the American Standard of Living.

By MARY BROWN SUMNER.

(Exclusive Service The Survey Press Bureau.)

Overwork for underpay is not the only form of human exploitation, and Gifford Pinchot has justly called the increased cost of living one of the problems of human conservation. A German mother of six children, an unusually careful New York housewife, was good enough to go over her accounts for last winter, and this with the writer. Her weekly expenditures last winter were as follows.

| Food | $7.35 |
| Fuel | 1.00 |
| Rent | 3.00 |
| Insurance | .65 |
| Clothing | 2.00 |
| Sundries | 1.60 |
| Total | $15.00 |

Her available weekly income is fixed at this amount, and she has used every means possible to a skillful marketer who is on confidential terms with her tradesmen, to avoid drawing on her reserve fund for the slack summer months. Nevertheless the increase in 13 necessary commodities that her accounts show has raised her food expenditure, at the usual standard, by 90 cents a week, or 12 per cent above last year's schedule. Part of this comes out of the summer fund as much as can be spared out of clothing and sundries, the latter covering car fares, health and recreation expenses—and the balance, about one-third, is made up by stinting. She has increased her consumption of potatoes—is our standard of living approaching that of Ireland?—has cut out pork entirely, has decreased her consumption of beef one-sixth, of butter one-fourth, and now mixes one quart of skimmed milk with one of bottled.

Recent Increases.

This is but one of many examples of how individual families have felt the pressure of high prices in New York this winter. Average made from 50 sources of information scattered throughout the lower parts of the city show the following increase in the 13 food commodities referred to, here placed for comparison beside the increases shown by the tables of W. [illegible] the [illegible] visiting housekeeper of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, which are based on a wide canvass of retail shops in all parts of the city, and have been used in the federal investigation of cost of Living:

| | Cents Increase | W. Gibb's Tables. |
|---|---|---|
| Lamb, lb | .03½ | .. |
| Mutton, lb | .04 | .04 |
| Beef, lb. | .03 | .04 to .05 |
| Pork, lb. | .04½ | .05 |
| Lard, lb. | .03½ | 03 |
| Chicken, lb. | .05 | ... |
| Fish, lb | 02 | 03 |
| Butter, lb. | .04 | .06 |
| Cheese, lb. | .03 | 02 |
| Eggs, Doz | 06 | 06 |
| Milk, qt. or can, condensed | .01 | .01 |
| Flour, 3½ lbs | .0[illegible] | |
| Sugar, 3½ lbs | .00½ | |
| Totals | 40 | 21 |

Though Miss Gibb's tables do not cover all the commodities, they show a total increase almost as large. What 40 cents in one unit of each of these commodities means practically in a household can be judged from the following tables of weekly amounts by a family of five:

| | Weekly Amount | Increased Cost |
|---|---|---|
| Lamb, lbs | 4½ | 11½ |
| Mutton, lbs | 2 | .08 |
| Beef, lbs | 9 | 27 |
| Pork, lbs | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| Lard, lbs | 1 | [illegible] |
| Chicken, lbs | 4 | 20 |
| Fish, lbs | 2½ | 0[illegible] |
| Butter, lbs | 2½ | 1[illegible] |
| Cheese, lbs | ½ | 0[illegible] |
| Eggs, doz | 2 | 12 |
| Milk, qts | 14 | 14 |
| Flour, [illegible] lbs | 1 | 01 |
| Sugar, 3½ lbs | 1 | 00½ |
| Total | | $1.25 |

Cutting Down Food Essentials

When to this $1.25 is added what is recognized as a large factor in high prices by the New York state superintendent of weights and measures, that is, the shrinkage of loaves and of food bought in packages, the average increase of last [illegible] in food cost this winter [illegible] estimates of 15 heads of households, is probably not an overstatement.

The German mother was not only an unusually economical housekeeper, but she had what few working class families are able to have—a reserve fund to fall back upon. With most the deficit must be made up by going without—by "crowding nearer to the edge of want."

From tradesmen and social workers we hear of the cutting down on food essentials—meat, butter, eggs and milk. This is no spectacular and shortlived boycott by the middle class, but a permanent paring off the edges of food consumption by the very poor.

Another method of making up the deficit—one not, however, so universally open as the passive one of stinting—is overwork, especially the work of mothers and children. Not only do social workers report a large increase in the number of women looking for janitor's work with free rent, but of 30 day nurseries where inquiry was made only one reported a decrease in applications over the preceding year. Eleven reported no decrease and 18 an absolute increase. That is, their experience shows as many mothers in the labor market in a year of prosperity as in a year of slack work for men. The day nurseries, as is generally known, are for the children of mothers while they [illegible] at work during the day.

The Effect On the Children

The board of health reports an increase this winter over last of 1922 work certificates issued to school children, which may in part, at any rate, be [illegible] to a greater need at home of what the children can earn. From more than one source too we hear that a smaller number of boys and girls are going to the high schools. One public school [illegible], after giving the number from [illegible] school—[illegible] in 1909-10 as against 34 in 1908-9, says: "Very few of our girls leave school unless under financial stress. The increase not in a period of depression is therefore significant. Last year, and in years preceding, two-thirds of our graduates went to high school. This year only one half."

[illegible] observed [illegible]—a shortened period of education for children, overwork for mothers and stinting for all—the [illegible] mean a distinct lowering of that American standard of living which Professor [illegible] has been the marvel of the [illegible] and give some hint of the [illegible] high prices.

A patent has been granted an Arkansas man on a dinner pail fitted with a slow-burning lamp to keep the contents hot.

JUNE 18 THE DAY OF DAYS, When the Whole Nation Will Join In Enthusiastic Welcome to Roosevelt

By CHARLES N. LURIE.

"Colonel Roosevelt," said I, "what do you think about your getting home again?"

"Speaking with due regard to the historical, archaeological, ethnological and moral significance of what I am about to say," replied the distinguished traveler, "I may reply that I look upon my homecoming somewhat as my lamented friend, the late John Hay, might have done. You recall what he said in 'Little Breeches?' It is 'a derned sight better business than loafing around the throne.'"—From an imaginary interview.

FOR some months America has been looking toward Europe with eyes that had an unutterable yearn behind the irises. We have been as children bereft of a parent, as scholars without an accustomed kindly mentor, as men without a wise counselor. The African hunt was past; the ports of civilization had been reached; steamers were making regular sailings to the United States. Why couldn't our own Roosevelt, our only living ex-president, hurry home at once instead of making speeches to interested but slightly bored looking bodies of Europeans constitutionally unable to appreciate him as he deserved? They could have sent their diplomas and degrees and presents by mail, couldn't they?

But it's all over now. The period of waiting is almost past and Miss Columbia won't have to play Penelope for her wandering Ulysses much longer. On June 18 the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria will steam into New York harbor with Roosevelt on the bridge, giving suggestions to the captain about the navigation of the ship, and we can all go to bed that night—after reading the dispatches, of course, with the comfortable assurance that the nation is safe. June 19 will be a great day for the throat specialists and the fireworks makers. The former will be counting the fat fees received for treating hoarse cheerers; the latter will be reckoning profits.

Nation to Join New York in Welcome.

For several weeks Uncle Sam has been getting ready to welcome his "wandering boy." New York will be the port of entry, and New York will do more than its share in greeting the colonel—he is a New Yorker by birth, you know, and once ran third in a race for the mayoralty—but New York has no monopoly of the enthusiasm. The reception to the returning ex-president and mighty hunter will be national in its scope and size. Every one of the forty-eight states and territories, as well as Alaska and the outlying islands, will have its representatives in line to greet him and assure him that we are glad to have him with us again. They will tell him with what interest his fellow citizens have followed his triumphal course through Europe, how they have read every line telling how he hobnobbed with princes and potentates and how they have rejoiced exceedingly in the greatest reception ever accorded abroad to any man of any rank or nationality.

The reception in New York to Colonel Roosevelt is expected to outdo in earnest, sincere enthusiasm that given to him in Europe. In no sense is he a "citizen of the world." He is an American and is proud of it, and he has lost none of his Americanism during his sojourn in Africa and Europe. Perhaps that is what endears him most to us. The New York reception will be wildly, madly, enthusiastically American. To prove this it is only necessary to say that the Irish-Americans, the Italian-Americans, the Hebrew-Americans, the German-Americans and many other sorts of hyphenated Yankees will take part in it. If Colonel Roosevelt listens to all the greetings that will be shouted to him on June 18 he will hear, besides English, more languages and dialects than he heard in Africa and Europe.

The reception is to be purely unofficial and civic and therefore devoid of official and military features. From one viewpoint it may be looked upon as a private affair, since the national, state and city governments have no official parts in it. It is to be a spontaneous outpouring of the feelings of the populace toward a man who has earned by years of service the right to be considered the representative American. He will be welcomed at the Battery in New York city by Mayor William J. Gaynor, but the city's head will extend to him a welcome, not in his official capacity, but as head of a great body of American citizens eager to extend the hand to one of themselves. At the head of the reception committee appointed by Mayor Gaynor is Cornelius Vanderbilt, the hardest working member of the famous wealthy family.

Water Parade on the Program.

The program of the Roosevelt reception includes a water parade similar to that witnessed at the Hudson-Fulton celebration, but not so long. The progress of the colonel's steamer will be retarded if necessary so as to have it reach quarantine exactly at 9 o'clock in the morning. The citizens' committee of 250 has chartered the Hudson river steamer Albany and will steam down the bay to greet the incoming liner. A great fleet of ships of every size and description will accompany the Albany, every available vessel having been chartered by organizations anxious to be among the first to welcome the homecomer.

Those persons gifted with strong imaginations may now put their hands behind their ears and imagine they hear the noise of the myriad whistles and sirens that will greet the first glimpse of the Kaiserin. A little later the colonel and his party will leave the steamer and embark on the revenue cutter that will take them to the Battery. Colonel Roosevelt and the reception committee will disembark at the Battery, where Mayor Gaynor, in the presence of a big crowd, will receive his distinguished visitor on a platform especially erected for the purpose. After the speeches of welcome have been listened to and have received appropriate replies the party will proceed up Broadway in the following order:

First, mounted police; second, mounted band; third, escort of rough riders (these will be real rough riders, the men who charged up San Juan hill behind the colonel); fourth, Colonel Roosevelt in a carriage; fifth, entire reception committee in carriages. The procession will then turn from Broadway into Washington square and through Washington arch up Fifth avenue to a point above Fifty-ninth street, where paraders will break ranks. Lined up on both sides of Fifth avenue will be the organizations which will welcome the colonel home. The proposed parade has been abandoned.

Even Tody Hamilton, champion circus press agent, would find himself at a loss for words to describe the welcome. It will be national in character. Weeks and weeks before the date of the event, as soon as it became known in the land that a great assemblage was planned to greet Roosevelt when he first touched American soil again, requests and appeals for places in the line began to pour in on Captain Arthur F. Cosby, a former rough rider and regular army man, who is secretary of the reception committee. The problem early became one of selection, limitation and rejection. Why, the Italian-Americans of New York, characteristically enthusiastic over the opportunity to pay honor to the man who had done so much for stricken Messina, asked permission to turn out no less than 20,000 men! Of course it could not be granted, but they will be liberally represented.

Syrians and Others in Costume.

There will be many others of foreign extraction in line. The Syrians of the city will turn out in their national headgear, the fez, and there will be a hundred Hungarians in national costume. The ranks will be entirely civic in character, with the exception of the rough riders, in western costume, and the Spanish war veterans. It is estimated that there will be from 15,000 to 20,000 men in line. Some members of the civilian bodies will wear distinctive dress. The Hamilton club of Chicago, for instance, which sent in an early request for a place, will be garbed in high silk hats and frock coats and will carry canes. There will be similar clubs and organizations from many cities, as well as cowboys and others. Fifth avenue will be liberally decorated, it is expected, with flags and bunting. The committee has requested the owners and occupants of houses to make such visible manifestation of their joy over Roosevelt's return.

Probably the feature of the reception that will attract the greatest amount of popular attention will be the rough riders, former subordinates and comrades of the central figure in the affair. At the coming celebration New York will have its first opportunity since the Spanish-American war to see this famous body of men. As many of the 500 members of the Roosevelt Rough Riders' association as can reach New York will assemble in the city, and it is expected that at least 300 of them will be on view. The regiment will stay in New York a week. On Thursday following the reception there will be a regimental dinner at which Colonel Roosevelt will be the guest of honor. President Charles A. Hunter of the association, who is clerk of the United States court at Guthrie, Okla., recently issued a call to all rough riders to assemble in New York before June 16. President Hunter will have personal charge of the regiment and will answer for its good behavior in the metropolis.

Two Thousand Miles to Greet Him.

An interesting little feature of the parade will be the presence of the two Abernathy boys, Louis and Temple, aged ten and six, who undertook a 2,000 mile ride on horseback, from Frederick, Okla., to New York, in order to be on hand to greet Colonel Roosevelt, their father's friend. The father of the two boys is John R. Abernathy, United States marshal at Guthrie, who went hunting with President Roosevelt in the spring of 1905 and showed him how to catch wolves alive with his bare hands. Soon afterward the president sent to Abernathy his commission as marshal. The boys have inherited their father's pluck and endurance.

Oyster Bay will have its own welcome for its famous fellow citizen. Soon after his return Colonel Roosevelt will visit various cities to which he has been invited. In August he will speak in Kansas and will attend the annual frontier celebration at Cheyenne, Wyo.

The Latest Move to Save Our Forests

Government's Forest Products Laboratory at Wisconsin University.

THANKS to the efforts of Former President Roosevelt, President Taft, Former Chief Forester Pinchot and others attempts to preserve the country's forests are under way. The speedy disappearance of all our trees which, according to some estimates, will last but twenty-five years longer at the present rate of consumption—may be staved off a little longer. In the meantime an attempt to solve the forest preservation problem by attacking it from a different angle is promising good results. It is the endeavor to save for use the two-thirds of each tree which are now being wasted. If scientific methods of utilization will enable us to use three-thirds of a tree instead of one-third as at present, the drain on the nation's forests will meet with a very effectual check. The estimate of 66 2-3 per cent waste at present was made recently by the officials of the United States forest service.

In the effort to prevent this truly alarming waste of wood the government is concentrating its energies at the newly erected forest products laboratory at the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, Wis. The purpose of the laboratory is the devising of scientific methods not only of saving what trees are left, but also of utilizing the so called "waste products" in the making of print paper, wood alcohol, turpentine and other useful materials the manufacture of which is now eating up the forests at a prodigious rate.

In the laboratory are included all sorts of apparatus intended to demonstrate what can be done in the matter of wood utilization and preservation. There are machines to test the tensile and torsion strength of various sorts of wood in order to tell to which purposes they may best be put. There are impact machines so gauged that the hammers, ranging in weight from 50 to 250 pounds, can be dropped from heights up to six feet upon the beam or block of wood, exerting a sudden pressure of hundreds of pounds. This is to test the resistance of the wood. There are test tanks in which woods of various sorts are immersed in preservative solutions in order to ascertain how and with what chemicals they may best be impregnated in order to withstand the attacks of the fungi and insects that do an incalculable amount of damage in a year. There are also [illegible] into which timbers are placed and in which oil is forced into the fibers of the wood until it will hold no more in order to determine how timber may be rendered more durable. There are chemical laboratories, machine shops, offices and every variety of equipment and machinery to fit the laboratory for its work. The university, which has one of the best forestry courses in the world, is co-operating with the government in the tests.

A very interesting feature of the laboratory's work is the papermaking plant, wherein it is hoped that the possibility of making satisfactory print paper from materials other than spruce and hemlock wood will be demonstrated. The plant is complete and able to turn out every grade of paper, from the finest correspondence stationery to the coarsest wrapping paper. Every step in the complicated process, from the breaking of the wood into chips for the first treatment by soda and sulphite solutions to the final running of the sheets of paper through the calendering rolls to produce a finished surface, is followed carefully so that the results of the substitution of various woods hitherto not used successfully for this purpose for the usual materials may be noted at each stage in the process of manufacture.

How to make timber last longer by protecting it with preservatives from the various borers and fungous growths which attack wood is one of the most important problems to which considerable time and laboratory space are given. A touch of acute interest is lent to this work from the fact that through its direct agency human life may be saved, since one of the most common sources of fatal mine caveins is the destruction of the supporting timbers by fungi and other enemies of the wood.

What sorts of wood will best stand various strains—in bridges, buildings and different structures—will be determined in the timber testing laboratory, where two seven-horsepower motors furnish the current to run the machinery of the laboratory. In the torsion machine timbers can be twisted until the strain reaches 30,000 inch pounds. Five testing machines are provided to test the strength of different woods under slow pressure, one having a capacity of 100,000 pounds, another of twice that amount and three other smaller machines of 30,000 pounds each.

To see what sudden strains oak, pine, maple and other sorts of wood will withstand the impact machine mentioned before in this article was built in the machine shops of Purdue university and sent to the Wisconsin forestry laboratory for experiments. Steam heated ovens for drying wood, in order to test the shrinkage, warping tendencies and water content of different varieties, are a part of the laboratory equipment, and a room in which to conduct seasoning experiments has also been set aside. In another part of the laboratory tests will be conducted to ascertain the heat conductivity of different woods to assist in the work of the tests.

Stumps and other portions of the pine trees now wasted will be put into stills and retorts, and the turpentine, tar and gaseous material will be extracted, carried off, separated and refined into various commercial products. If methods of doing this economically can be devised the problem of utilizing much of the pine wood now wasted will be solved.

This Woman May Head Country's Educators

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Superintendent of Chicago's Public Schools.

IN virtue of her exalted position as superintendent of the Chicago public schools Mrs. Ella Flagg Young is already the foremost woman among the nation's educators. As president of the Illinois Teachers' association she heads the pedagogical profession in her state. If she is elected president of the National Educational association at its convention in July in Boston, as seems possible, she will be the professionally recognized leader of the country's teachers. It is hardly necessary to add that she will be the first woman to hold the position, since no other woman has ever advanced so far to the front in the profession of teaching as has Mrs. Young.

It was last year that Chicago astonished the country by electing Mrs. Young to the office of superintendent of the city's schools. The very idea of a woman superintendent of schools seems not to have suggested itself previously to the boards of education of the country's big cities, and the election caused a sort of shock. The magnitude of the office, with its superintendency of more than 6,000 teachers and nearly 300,000 pupils, its supervision of the disbursement annually of more than $60,000,000 and its command of a salary of $10,000, all sent a thrill of interest through those who are interested in the nation's school children. A woman superintendent of schools in a big city was to the public an unheard of thing, for no one could even remember the suggestion of such a choice. Since then another woman school superintendent has been elected, in the person of Mrs. Mary D. Bradford of Kenosha, Wis.

The size of the salary attached to Mrs. Young's position was one thing that aroused general comment. It was suggested in some quarters that if a male superintendent of schools was worth $10,000 a year a woman superintendent could not earn so much. The suggestion had even been made at the meeting of the Chicago school board which elected Mrs. Young, but the fiery indignation of Mrs. Isabella O'Keefe, the only woman member of the board and Mrs. Young's chief supporter, promptly and quickly squelched it. The salary remained what it had been and there has been no suggestion that Chicago is dissatisfied with its bargain. Mrs. Young was recently re-elected to succeed herself for six months. The only other city school superintendent who receives a salary as large as that of Mrs. Young is Superintendent William H. Maxwell of New York city.

Chicago has had no cause to be dissatisfied with its choice of a woman to direct its schools. In experience, ability, insight and foresight Mrs. Young stands in the very front rank of the country's educators. She had proved her ability in the public school system of the city as teacher, principal and head of the city's normal school. Her worth as an educator won recognition from the late Dr. William R. Harper, who, despite his well known antipathy to woman educators in general, made her professor of education in the big institution of which he was president, the University of Chicago. Her pedagogical and administrative abilities in various capacities were therefore known in the school world before the attention of the outside world was centered on her by the election of last August. Forty-seven years of service preceded the election.

MRS. ELLA FLAGG YOUNG

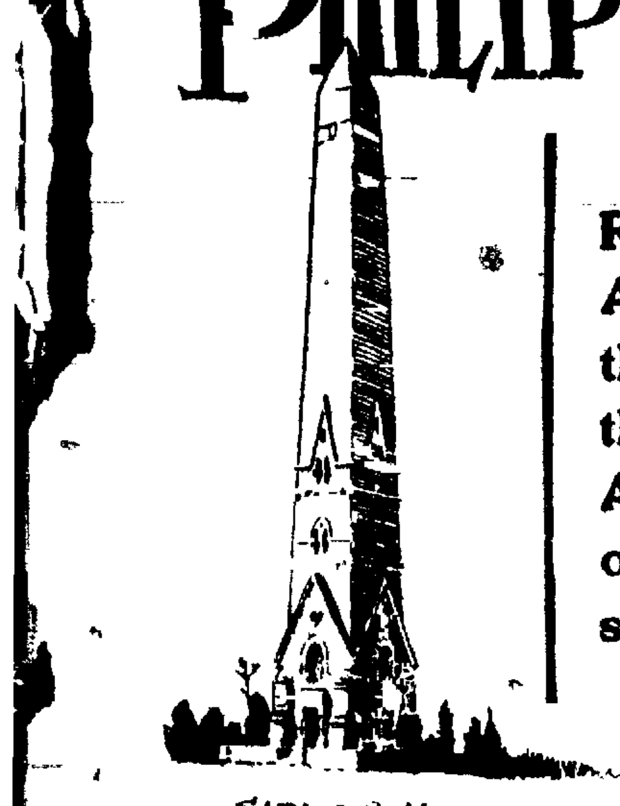

Mrs. Young is sixty-five years old. She is a widow and childless. She was born in Buffalo, where she received most of her [illegible] education. When she was [illegible] her family removed to Chicago, and she was graduated from one of the city's high schools. She took up teaching as a profession [illegible] afterward.

The National Educational association, which may ask Mrs. Young to become its president, is one of the biggest associations in point of numbers and influence in this country. Its annual conventions serve as a clearing house for the information and theories that are the crop of a year's tilling of the field of education. To it go the men and women who are shaping the future life of the nation, to exchange ideas, to accept what is proved good and reject what is false. In few other [illegible] development [illegible] the [illegible] of methods the observation of results. Its membership comprises the heads of the schools and colleges and universities and the city, state and national officials [illegible] have [illegible] the [illegible] of the educational forces of the country. It is a high honor to be raised to the presidency of this body.

PHILIP SCHUYLER — A PATRIOT WHO WAS ROBBED OF FAME

SARATOGA MONUMENT

Relieved of Command of the Army of the North Shortly Before the Battle of Saratoga Through the Scheming of Gates, Who Got All the Credit for the Surrender of Burgoyne Although He Deserved None.

PHILIP SCHUYLER

SCHUYLER MANSION ALBANY BUILT 1765

SWEET KITTY V.R. (MRS. PHILIP SCHUYLER)

IN the darkest days of the Revolution when every sign indicated that the struggling colonists were going to be overwhelmed by the armies of King George Major General Philip Schuyler commanding the Department of the North saw one rift in the clouds Great soldier he was not, but he planned a campaign that brought to American arms the most signal victory of the war and that caused France to recognize and join hands with the infant republic On the eve of triumph he was supplanted by a vain incompetent man, who [illegible] him of the honors that should have gone to him and who then in his conceit sought to oust Washington [illegible] commander in chief

Schuyler had three great faults He was [illegible] he had [illegible] being rich he was [illegible] for the fortune that came to him from his father [illegible] until he was one of the [illegible] men of his time He [illegible] Dutch and he should [illegible] for the gout [illegible] developed when he was a child and he inherited it with his Dutch blood and the wide domain of the Patroon

Because of his wealth and prominence and his service in the French and Indian wars he was put in command of the Army of the North at the outbreak of the Revolution He planned the invasion of Canada and would have commanded the expedition but illness forced him to remain behind and Montgomery assumed command instead The scheme was brilliant That it failed was not the fault of Schuyler or Montgomery Never did a general have a more insubordinate or mutinous body of men than Montgomery After the capture of Montreal they wanted to return They had enlisted for only a few months and their time had expired They had undergone untold hardships they had found that the Canadians whom they supposed were ripe for rebellion were loyal to the British and they were half clothed and half starved It was only by cajolery that Montgomery could induce a portion of his force to take part in the attack on Quebec There Montgomery met his death and the Continentals were beaten The siege was maintained until the spring, and then General Sullivan began the retreat that has been described as one of the best conducted of all the war

In the British parliament Montgomery's attack on Quebec was characterized as second in daring only to that of Wolfe and he was lauded as the bravest of the brave

Lord North the premier replied that however much Montgomery might be admired for his bravery and his worth, it should not be forgotten that he was a rebel and had been killed in rebellion against his king

This brought from Edmund Burke a response such as the house of parliament rarely had heard

'It ill befits his lordship to use the term 'rebel'" he declared 'But for rebels his majesty George III would not be king of England today Cromwell was a rebel Every step in England's advancement was the result of rebellion To rebels are due the great progress of the world Without rebellion we would be slaves If Richard Montgomery was a rebel he was in illustrious company and I for one am proud of the privilege of paying tribute to so noble a soldier in the [illegible] of liberty

THE RETREAT FROM QUEBEC

The retreat from Quebec was [illegible] enough but to its bitterness were added the horrors of smallpox and typhus It was but a fragment of the army that Montgomery had taken north that returned to Crown Point and Ticonderoga The British led by General Guy Carlton, were in the wake of the Continentals, and after only a semblance of a defense Crown Point was abandoned Carlton might have captured Ticonderoga, too, but he was content to postpone that work to a later day

In the gloom that settled upon the country as a result of the Quebec disaster it was natural perhaps that Schuyler came in for much blame The men who had gone with Montgomery were mostly New Englanders They had no love for Schuyler He was a New Yorker He had been one of New York's commissioners for the settlement of the boundary dispute between New York and New England New York had claimed all the territory to the Connecticut river but had compromised on a line 20 miles east of the Hudson That line prevailed however only to the northern limits of Massachusetts

New York claimed all the territory now embraced by the state of Vermont There was intense jealousy between the colonies New York did not have the preponderance in population then that it has now Of the 13 colonies it stood seventh in point of population Virginia was first New York was the richest colony, but it had the largest proportion of Tories and New England resented the placing of a New York general to command the army of the north composed mostly of New England men Added to this colonial jealousy was the racial one The New Englanders were of English extraction and they scoffed at the idea of serving under a man of Dutch blood

A queer force indeed was the continental army of that early day Later, after many mistakes and hardships, it was to be drilled by Steuben into one of the finest fighting bodies of the world, but it was a fractious, mutinous crew at first Untrained and unwilling to accept discipline, it had its own ideas of action Each militia body worked independently For the routine of camp and the monotony of drill it had no love It would enlist for a short period, and then, regardless of the stage of the campaign insist when its time was up on its right to return home

The soldier had his fields to cultivate his crops to gather and his family to provide for When Congress, in its poverty failed to supply equipment there was rebellion and disorder. The men were willing enough to fight, but they chafed at delay They wanted the fight to be ready for them when they were ready to fight They did not want to lose any time

To Schuyler a careful, precise orderly man the insubordination of the militia was a horror He was a stickler for military etiquette, but the militiamen had no respect for military forms They were sticklers for independence A private considered himself as good as an officer Weren't they fighting for liberty and equity? On duty they would obey orders, but off duty the captain major or colonel was Jim, Joe or John

Intrigue

[illegible] abundance Schuyler drew [illegible] up and feed his troops [illegible] failed to provide Then [illegible] exhausted his resources and could give no more, he got the reward many others like him received He was accused of mysteriously doing away with great stores of goods and great sums of money Next rumors were circulated affecting his loyalty to the patriot cause These naturally developed into reports that he was a traitor For a long time he ignored all this, but the clamor grew and he appealed to General Washington and to Congress for an investigation Washington wrote to him that what Schuyler was being subjected to was only in miniature what he himself had been undergoing The commander in chief laid bare his heart to his friend told him of all the trials the disappointments, the vile insinuations and the treachery he had to meet and begged him not to abate one particle in his work

Schuyler, when he read the general's letter, apologized for bothering him with his troubles, they were so small compared with those the commander-in-chief had to combat

But Schuyler soon discovered that behind all the attack upon him there was one active agent New England had an idol It was General Gates. He was the soldier who, if in command of the Army of the North would accomplish wonders The New Englanders would serve under him with enthusiasm He like General Charles Lee was a trained soldier He had been in the English army All he required was an opportunity to show his talents But he required a big field He was too big to waste his talents in a small theater

Gates was not averse to letting people know how much better he could handle an army than could the general in command He could write well and he could talk well He kept close to Congress and pointed out how Schuyler had failed to do this and failed to do that Now and then he gently explained how Washington had failed to do this and failed to do that What was necessary he explained, if the cause was not to fail, was that a competent general should command. The Army of the North was especially in need of a competent commander.

Congress spurred on by the New England members appointed Gates to command the Army of the North in Canada Gates was delighted Schuyler had not been consulted and Washington had not been consulted There was no Army of the North in Canada all the American troops having retreated to Ticonderoga or gone home, but Gates believed and had private assurances from his friends in Congress, that what was meant was that he would be free to operate in the north independent of Schuyler and that if Schuyler did not resign in pique at the discourtesy shown him Gates would in due season supplant him

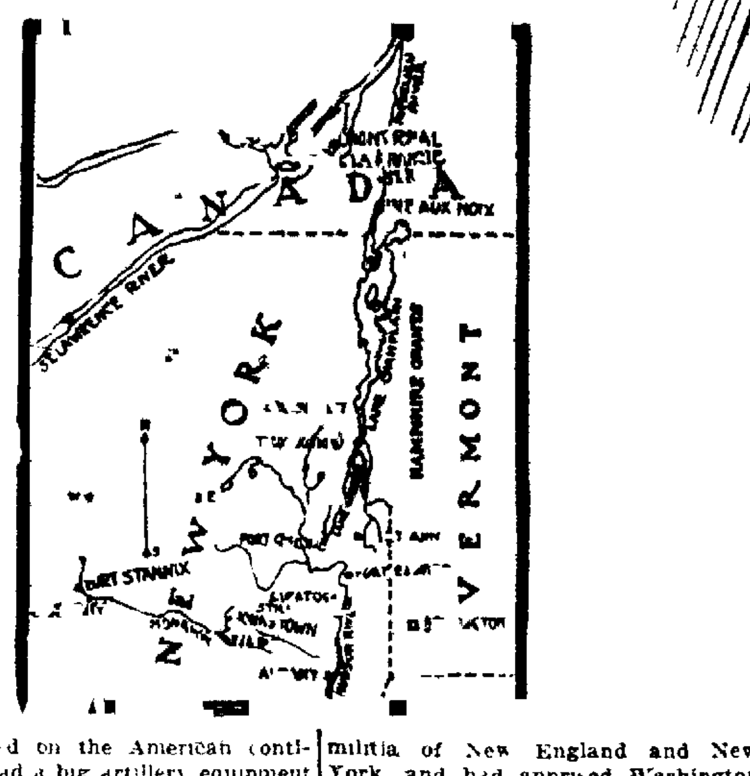

To Albany went Gates and for a time he was the guest of Schuyler. Not until weeks after Gates had proceeded to Ticonderoga to examine that stronghold did Schuyler discover what was designed Then he went before Congress and plainly but courteously insisted upon having absolute command or having the privilege of resigning Congress was a bit ashamed and a bit alarmed ashamed of having gratuitously affronted the commander-in-chief and the commander of the Army of the North and afraid of the effect its unwarranted supplanting of Schuyler would have on a great and influential body of his friends Gates was recalled and Schuyler went back to Albany with assurances of the esteem and confidence of Congress

Burgoyne.

Meantime there had been developments in the Canadian country that boded ill for the American cause In the fall of 768 General Burgoyne second in command to Carlton had gone to England and laid before the ministry a plan to end the rebellion He would lead an army from Quebec south Sir William Howe could send an army up from New York to meet the Canadian army A third army made up of regulars Tories and Indians would sweep down the Mohawk valley from Lake Ontario Separately or jointly these three forces could overcome any force that could be mustered to oppose them With all New York under control of the British the colonies would be rent asunder Then it would be easy to stamp out any remnant of the Revolutionary army that did not disband

The scheme was a good one and Burgoyne arrived in Quebec with an army of 8,000 men mostly regulars St Leger was sent over Lake Ontario to Oswego with a force of regulars to join the Tories under Butler and the Indians under Sir John Johnson and the Indian Joseph Brant Only one thing was overlooked That was to order Howe Lord George Germain the war minister had a week end visit to make to the country and in his hurry to get away from London failed to sign the letter to General Howe Years later the letter was found in one of the pigeonholes of his desk

While Congress was meddling and while Schuyler was insisting to be relieved of responsibility or relieved of Gates Burgoyne was on his way south from Quebec. His army was the best trained on the American continent It had a big artillery equipment and a great quantity of supplies Schuyler did not learn of its approach until it was near Lake Champlain Before he could do much it had reached Crown Point Hastily he did what he could to strengthen Ticonderoga where General St Clair was stationed with 2,000 men The British moved swiftly and rendered Ticonderoga untenable by dragging cannon to the top of Mount Defiance Neither Gates nor Schuyler thought it possible to get cannon up its rugged cliffs. St Clair had to choose between sacrificing his army by a defense or sacrificing his reputation by abandoning the fort He bravely chose the latter and led his army out at night So hurried was his flight that he could send no message to Schuyler To escape the British he made his way toward Rutland and then by a circuitous route proceeded to join Schuyler

With no knowledge of what had become of St Clair, and with only a small body of militiamen Schuyler hastened to throw himself in the path of the invaders With a skill approaching genius he began a series of operations that were masterly in every detail Burgoyne had to follow one route Schuyler's only hope of getting together an army was to delay the progress of the British The route Burgoyne had to traverse Schuyler proceeded to impede with every obstacle he could use Streams were clogged thousands of trees were felled to block the roads and all the cattle in all the country round were driven off Fort Edward was abandoned fields were laid waste and the whole country stripped of everything that would supply the enemy

Burgoyne soon found himself in difficulties It took him twenty-one days to travel 20 miles It took him nearly as long to travel the next 20. Meanwhile Schuyler had rushed messengers far and wide to alarm the militia of New England and New York and had apprised Washington of the situation and begged for reinforcements

Drawing the Net.

But Washington was having his own troubles He was watching Howe who was leaving New York—whether to ascend the Hudson or to attack Philadelphia was not known, but Washington had need of every man in his force By the time Washington had learned that Howe was bound for Philadelphia Burgoyne met with his first misfortune Some of the Indians in his party scalped Jennie McCrea, the sweetheart of one of his officers. This barbarous act aroused the people more than did the appeals of Schuyler, and soon he began to get recruits Then Burgoyne whose supplies were growing short sent a force of 500 Hessians to Bennington to seize the stores he heard were there. They were overwhelmed by the Green Mountain boys under General Stark, as were also 500 more Hessians Burgoyne had sent to reinforce the first body

The victory had a most inspiriting effect upon the Continentals The old Colonial jealousy began to be forgotten Invasion wiped out differences. All factions now were bent upon the one purpose of defending their country against the British

As his force grew Schuyler with no desire of risking a general engagement until the proper time drew back further and further but gave the British no rest for skirmishers were on their flanks night and day

Schuyler had selected Saratoga as his battleground and had begun to throw up intrenchments there on Bemis Heights Burgoyne was perplexed He could proceed only slowly He had heard nothing from Howe He had lost 1,000 of his men at Bennington and the skirmishers were giving him great trouble His communications, too were being attacked His supplies were growing smaller and smaller He began to think of retreat He was doomed

But Schuyler had more to think of than Burgoyne St Leger had arrived at Oswego If he and his Indian allies swooped down the Mohawk valley and joined Burgoyne it would be fatal to the Continentals Against the protests of his staff Schuyler sent [illegible] Arnold and 800 men to aid General Herkimer at Oriskany How brilliantly Arnold and Herkimer succeeded is history St Leger fled to Canada after losing half his force

Daily the situation of Burgoyne became more desperate He had heard nothing from Howe His only hope lay in fighting his way through to Albany Every day of delay lessened his chances [illegible] the American force [illegible] the British The Americans [illegible] number [illegible] was certain of victory All he had planned for [illegible] so skillfully to attain was about [illegible] accomplished when Gates arrived with an order relieving Schuyler of command

If Schuyler felt resentment he did not show it He offered to assist Gates in any way that officer desired his services but Gates ignored him

Within a few weeks the battle of Bemis Heights was fought The English would have been destroyed then and there but for the stupidity of Gates who would not support Arnold when that officer had the British ranks wavering That fight was won by Arnold, not by Gates So too was the battle of Saratoga Gates heated with liquor was in his tent, while the battle was on Arnold who had been stripped of all authority rushed into the fight and led charge after charge while an orderly of Gates sent by the general to order him off the field sought in vain to overtake him Never was Arnold a more glorious figure than on Saratoga field when he won the greatest battle of the Revolution by defying an incompetent general's order Too bad he did not die there

For Saratoga Gates took all the credit to himself When Burgoyne surrendered Schuyler in civilian dress was present. The great grain fields near by had been burned by Mrs Schuyler (sweet Kitty V R ) as this charming daughter of the Van Rensselaers was known so that the British could get no food from the Schuyler lands and Burgoyne had burned the Schuyler home and all the houses near by but it was to Schuyler's mansion in Albany that Burgoyne and all his general officers went as guests after the surrender and never were they more graciously entertained Never was victory more welcome to a nation than Saratoga [illegible] to America Washington had been defeated by Brandywine, but what did that matter now?"

Gates, vain, foolish man thought he was a second Alexander. He schemed to supplant Washington as he had supplanted Schuyler, but failed He failed miserably in the southern campaign and he retired in disgrace and died scorned And when he died Schuyler the man he had robbed of the fame of Saratoga, was United States senator and one of the nation's most honored men

THOSE "GARGOYLES."

From the New York Sun

A college freshman was showing some friends the sights of the campus last week He was very proud of the new buildings and attempted to describe the architecture

See those things sticking out from the roofs don't you' asked the freshman pointing to a number of weird figures of stone 'Well last year a fellow called 'em gargoyles '

He laughed but his friends waited

"The funny thing about that was," [illegible] that the name has [illegible] Now every [illegible] gargoyle"

GIVE THEM A PLACE TO PLAY.

Plenty of room for dives and dens
(Glitter and glare and sin)
Plenty of room for prison pens Gather the criminals in)
Plenty of room for jails and courts
(Willing enough to pay)
But never a place for the lads to race,
No never a place to play

Plenty of room for shops and stores
Mammon must have the best!)
Plenty of room for the running sores
That rot in the city's breast
Plenty of room for the lure that leads
The hearts of our young astray,
But never a cent on a playground spent,
No never a place to play!

Plenty of room for schools and halls
Plenty of room for art
Plenty of room for teas and balls,
Platform stage and mart.
Proud is the city she finds a place
For many a fad today
But she's more than blind if she fails to find
A place for the boys to play!

Give them a chance for fun—
Better a playground plot than a court
And jail when harm is done!
Give them a chance—if you stint them now
Tomorrow you'll have to pay
A larger bill for a darker ill,
So give them a place to play!

"MISS" ALTHEA'S RESOLUTION

By KILBOURNE COWLES

ALTHEA had never known her own father, who had been taken away when she was a tiny baby, and her joy was unbounded when her mother told her one day, when she was eleven years old, that Mr. Brownson was to be her father.

"Oh, mother, how lovely!" she exclaimed. "Is he really going to marry us?"

"Yes, dear, that's it," smiled the mother, "he's going to marry us. We must both try to do all we can to deserve such happiness." There was a little note of anxiety in the mother's tone, for Althea had one serious fault—she did not always tell the truth. When she was very small her mother had laughed at her little "stories," and Althea had not been brought to realize how wrong fibbing was until the practice had grown into a habit.

The first few weeks in the new home with Mr. Brownson were delightful for Althea. Mr. Brownson loved to see her have pleasure and did all he could to make her happy.

"Althea," he said after luncheon one day, "would you like to go over the golf links with me this afternoon?"

"Yes, daddy, I'd love to."

"Well, put on your hat, while I get the new golf balls I brought out from town the other day."

He did not notice the cloud that passed over Althea's face as she slipped from the table and ran for her hat.

"Althea," he asked when she soon joined him in the hall, "have you seen those golf balls I left in the settee drawer here?"

"Yes, I—I saw Jimmy take them." Jimmy was a handy boy about the house, installed in Mr. Brownson's bachelor days, who often acted as caddy for his employer.

"I suppose he took them on over to the club. I told him to meet me on the links."

Althea did not chat with her usual gaiety as she trudged along by Mr. Brownson's side.

"You're a quiet little girl to-day," he said pleasantly. "Nothing on your mind, I hope, my dear?" He gave her a droll smile which she bravely tried to return.

"You stay on the porch, while I look for Jimmy," said Mr. Brownson when they reached the club-house. Althea waited with a heavy heart while she saw Mr. Brownson and Jimmy in consultation on the links.

"Miss Althea," said Jimmy a moment later, "Mr. Brownson says to tell you to please excuse him; that he will not trouble you to go over the course with him to-day, and he says for you to return home at once."

Althea wandered the road home a very miserable little girl, fully determined to tell her mother her trouble. But Mrs. Brownson happened to be out. The reprimand she expected from her "daddy" that evening did not come. He treated her with a marked politeness that misled her into hoping that her fault had not been discovered, after all.

The next morning when Mr. and Mrs. Brownson were discussing a little excursion into the country, Mrs. Brownson said, "Shall we take Althea?"

"No," returned Mr. Brownson gravely, "I think Miss Althea will prefer remaining at home."

After two weeks of distant politeness from Mr. Brownson, and strange unresponsiveness from her mother to all her little hints for sympathy, Althea went to Mr. Brownson's library one morning and knocked timidly at the open door.

"Come in, Miss Althea. May I be of any service to you?"

"Oh, daddy, please don't call me 'Miss.' Please love me again!" she cried.

"I do love you, but I can't feel very informal with you, Miss Althea. I never associate any more intimately than I have to with people who don't tell"

"But—I'm always going to tell you the truth now. I'm sorry I didn't before, and that I took your golf balls and lost them playing with Dandy."

"It wasn't your taking the balls that hurt my feelings. I was hurt because you didn't tell me. You must always tell me the truth, dear child, if we are to be friends. I wanted so much to be real friends with you that I wouldn't even let the little mother help us. I told her we must fix things up ourselves. We can be real friends, can't we, Althea?"

"Oh, yes, daddy, yes; I will be truthful if you only will be friends with me!"

HIS HERO

By MARGARET MINOR

IT was an October afternoon, and through Indian summer's tulle-like haze a low-swinging sun sent shafts of scarlet light at the highest peaks of the Blue Ridge. The sweet-gum leaves looked like blood-colored stars as they floated slowly to the ground, and brown chestnuts gleamed satin-like through their gaping burs; while over all there rested a dense stillness, cut now and then by the sharp yelp of a dog as he scurried through the bushes after a rabbit.

Surrounded by this splendid autumn beauty stood Mountain Top Inn, near the crest of the Blue Ridge in Rockfish Gap, its historical value dating from the time when Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, after a long and spirited discussion in one of its low-ceiled rooms, decided upon the location of the University of Virginia.

On the porch of this old inn there now sat a little boy, idly swinging a pair of sun-tanned legs. Occasionally he tickled an old liver-colored hound that lay dozing in a limp heap; but being rewarded only by toothless snaps at very long intervals, he finally grew tired of this amusement, and stretching himself out on his back, he began to dream with wide-open eyes. At these dream-times, when he let his thoughts loose, they always bore him to the very same field, and here his fancy painted pictures with the vivid colors of a boy's imagination: pictures so strong that they left him flushed and tingling with pride; again, pictures that brought a cool, choking feeling to his throat; and at times pictures that made his childish mouth quiver and droop. Among all of these thought-born scenes, at intervals there would stand out the real ones, scenes that were etched on the clean walls of his memory in everlasting strokes.

He never tired thinking of that first morning—that morning when all the world seemed gilded with sunshine and throbbing with martial music. His grandfather had lifted him up on one of the "big gate" posts to see the soldiers march by. With mingled feelings of admiration and childish envy he had watched them drill for many weeks, but they had never seemed such real, grand soldiers until now, as they came marching by with quick, firm steps, keeping time to the clear, staccato notes, marching off to real battlefields. It was all so beautiful, splendid, and gay—the music, the soldiers, the people, the hurrahing! It stirred his sentient little body through and through with a kind of joy, and he thought it so strange that his mother's eyes were full of tears.

Just a few days later he had listened eagerly to the sharp, crackling sound of guns and the rumbling thunder of cannon, so near that the air seemed to vibrate. He and another little boy had stood and talked in high, quick tones, bragging and predicting breathlessly the result of the battle as they used the term "our men."

Finally they climbed the tallest oak on the lawn, and strained their young eyes to see which was "gettin' whipped."

A little while after this he remembered following his father through the long hospital ward. Over the first bed he saw him stoop and loosen the white cotton bandages of a wounded man. On the next narrow cot there was a slender boy of fifteen, who lay with clenched hands watching the work of the surgeon. Then they passed a woman, who was gently bathing the forehead of a man whose soldier days seemed likely to come to an early end.

Some weeks had gone by, when one day he followed a party of men to Marye's Heights. It was a short time after the battle of Fredericksburg. A light snow had fallen the night before, which the wind whirled and sifted about the dead, in a way that made them appear to be shuddering. Once a sharp gust blew the snow off a body lying on it face, and the boy's eyes filled. He scarcely heeded the talk of the men with whom he had gone. His thoughts were held fast by the awful scene which lay spread before his young eyes.

How often since then had the boy pictured himself a grown man, seated on just such a fine horse and following Lee! It was always Lee; in his dreamland through the heart of the battle he always followed General Robert E. Lee, his hero, whom he had never seen, but whom he had carried halo-crowned in his heart ever since he could remember.

And then the very saddest day in his life had come the day when the first news of Lee's surrender lay heavy on the hearts of the household. For a while he had followed [illegible] silently, with closed white lips, from one duty to another. Finally he went out to seek comfort from Uncle Jake, whom he found sitting with his back propped against the side of the corn-crib, drawing little quick puffs of smoke from his pipe.

"Uncle Jake," he said, "Lee 's just had to s'render."

"Yes, honey, I done heahud 'bout hit." And as he looked into Uncle Jake's little red, watery eyes, he saw no comfort there, and turned away. Then Uncle Jake said very tenderly: "Nuvvuh you min', son; ef you had be'n uh grow'd-up man you 'd uh whipped um sho! Unc' Jake gwine tek you possum-huntin' Sa'd'y night."

Seven months had gone by since the war had ended; still, on this October afternoon, as the boy lay stretched out on the porch of the old inn, he dreamed his boyish dreams of romance and heroism.

Suddenly his attention was attracted by the sound of hoofs, and turning his head he saw a man riding slowly down the road. A new arrival at the inn was always most interesting. An eager light came into the boy's eyes as he watched the rider, who was now near enough for him to see how firmly he sat in his saddle. The man seemed a very part of the strongly built horse, which carried him with an ease that indicated long habit.

A wiry little negro had also seen the approaching horseman, and was now hurrying across the lawn to meet him.

"May I spend the night here, my man?" asked the stranger.

"Yessuh—yessuh!" answered Uncle Jake, quickly, and opening the gate he stepped out and caught the bridle near the bit, as the horseman swung out of the creaking saddle to the ground.

"Uncle Jake, take the horse around to the stable!" called out the boy, who felt that the honors of hospitality rested on him, there being no one else in sight. Then he ran briskly down the walk to meet the stranger, who extended his fine, strong hand with a little smile, and said very kindly:

"How do you do, sir?"

"I'm well," replied the boy.

"And what is your name?"

"Jimmy."

"Jimmy? Well, Jimmy is a nice name," he said. Then he turned, and still held the boy's hand as he watched the little old negro, who stood with his head under the saddle-skirt, tiptoeing and straining in his effort to unfasten the girth. Finally, when he succeeded, he flung the saddle on the ground, and the horse, feeling relieved of his burden, first shook himself violently, and then expressed his comfort again and again in deep chest-tones.

During all this time Jimmy's eyes had been fastened on the stranger's spurs, and a peculiar feeling of incredulity gradually filled his mind.

Silver, indeed! He could not fool him! No one was rich enough to have real silver spurs! So sternly did he resent what he thought to be an attempt at deception that he drew his small brown hand slowly out of the stranger's gentle clasp.

After slipping off the bridle from the horse's head and dropping it by the saddle, Uncle Jake led him away by his forelock to the stable, and Jimmy walked toward the inn with his guest, who said as they reached the steps:

"Jimmy, we will sit here for a while, and then I will go over to the stable and see about my horse."

As they sat down the old hound came cautiously down the steps, wheezing out a husky greeting.

"She is too old to hurt anyone," said Jimmy.

"Is she yours?"

"No, sir. Tip's mine. Listen!" he exclaimed, as the sharp yelp of a dog again broke the stillness. "That's Tip! He goes off and runs rabbits all by himself."

"Perhaps he is after a fox."

"No, sir; Tip won't run a fox."

"Jimmy, can you tell from a dog's cry whether he is running a fox or a rabbit?"

"No, sir."

"Well, if he is trailing a rabbit he does not bark continually, but if he is after a fox he does; so you can always tell if you listen carefully."

"Never heard about that before," replied Jimmy, with a smile.

After this there followed a long pause, during which the stranger looked about inquiringly, then said:

"Jimmy, how long have you been living here?"

"Not very long. We refugeed over in North Carolina the first part of the war. Then we came back to Spottsylvania County while father was in prison. Why, we just came here after the s'render. You remember when Lee just had to s'render?" he asked, looking up into the stranger's face.

The boy's mouth, as usual, quivered as he uttered the word "s'render," but the man did not appear to see this. He seemed to be looking at a far-off mountain peak. After a pause he replied, "Yes, I remember," as he arose and started toward the stable.

"I'll show you the way," said Jimmy.

"Thank you, sir," he answered gravely.

When they entered the stable the big gray horse greeted his master with some soft little nickerings. "Oh, he knows you without even looking!" exclaimed Jimmy, in tones expressing delight and surprise.

"Yes, he knows me pretty well," the man replied, as he looked with anxious sympathy at a saddle-galled place on the horse's back.

Jimmy had climbed up on the side of the stall, and was also looking with much interest. Suddenly he exclaimed: "I know what's good for that! Some stuff down in the bottom of the chalybeate spring."

He pronounced each syllable of the word "chalybeate" very clearly, for it was a newly-learned word, and he was proud of his ability to use it.

"Why, yes; the iron in it ought to be healing. How far is the spring?"

"Oh, just a little way; I'll show you." Jimmy replied, jumping to the ground and quickly opening the stable door. "Let me lead him," he added.

"Hadn't you rather ride him, Jimmy?"

"Yes, sir," he replied, in rather shy but pleased tones.

"All right," said the man, as he swung the little fellow up on the horse. "There! Sit farther back, so you will not hurt that galled place. Now I'll lead him, and you tell me in which direction to go."

"Down the road there, just on the other side of the ice-pond," said Jimmy, pointing in that direction as they moved off.

The boy was happy as he cupped his bare legs close around the body of the horse, and watched the square shoulders of the man who walked slowly ahead. He thought him exceedingly nice and kind, and his feelings in regard to the spurs were not nearly so intense. The desire to ask if they were real silver, though, was strong, but he felt that perhaps it would not be polite, so he said nothing.

After they had gone some distance Jimmy exclaimed, "There's the spring!" Then he slid quickly to the ground, and without other words knelt down and, baring one arm, dipped out of the bottom of the spring a handful of rust-colored flakes.

"That is what you put on his back," he said. "Just lay it right on. It doesn't hurt; it just feels cool."

The directions were quietly obeyed, and the horse made no movement, save a slight quiver of the skin, as if to shake off a fly.

"Uncle Jake says that doctors can't make any finer medicine than this," he said, as he scooped up another handful.

"Well, Jimmy, I am very much obliged to you, and I'm sure that my horse is also," said the stranger, as they started on back to the stable.

In the meantime the saddle left by Uncle Jake near the horse-rack had attracted the attention of a young man as he came through the front gate. After looking at it for a few minutes, idle curiosity prompted him to turn it over with his foot, and as he did so three bright brass letters—"R. E. L."—greeted him. He looked sharply at them at first, then his eyes dilated, and a little prickly thrill ran through him. "I wonder if it can be!" he said. Suddenly some convincing feeling seemed to fill his mind, and then he almost ran to the house. On reaching the steps, he sprang up them two at a time, and entered the hall, where he met Mrs. Claverly.

"Mrs. Claverly—" he began, and stopped.

"Well?" she asked, smiling at his hesitation. "What is it, Charley?"

"Ah, do you know, Mrs. Claverly, I think that General Lee is here." His voice was husky with excitement.

"General Lee! Where?" But without waiting for a reply, she stepped quickly to the door of the old-fashioned parlor, and exclaimed in soft, suppressed tones to a group of women sitting there:

"They think that General Lee is here!"

"What makes them think so?" asked a thin, gray-haired woman, as she hastily arose.

"Why," replied the young man, his tones now quite positive, "his saddle with 'R. E. L.' on it is out there by the gate."

"There he comes now," said one of the group, eagerly; "at least, I suppose that it is he."

"Let me see," said Mrs. Claverly, going rapidly to the window. "I saw him once at the Greenbrier White, and I am sure that I would know him. Yes, it is he!" she exclaimed, as she looked at the man coming slowly across the lawn, talking earnestly to the barefoot boy at his side. His thoughts were so completely occupied by what he was saying that not until he was quite near the inn did he see the group on the porch, and his face flushed slightly as he realized that they were there to greet him. Lifting his hat, he ascended the steps with bared head. Mrs. Claverly walked quickly forward and extended her slim white hand.

"General Lee, I believe!"

"Yes, madam," he replied gravely, as he bowed low over her hand.

At the sound of Lee's name Jimmy's eyes grew round, and filled with astonishment. For one brief moment he stood gazing up at the stately old soldier, whom every one was greeting, then he backed slowly away until he reached the door. There he stood another moment, seeing nothing but his hero.

Suddenly he turned and darted down the long hall, up the stairway, and into his mother's room.

"Mother!" he exclaimed in breathless wonderment, "mother! General Lee is downstairs, and he is just splendid, and—er—mother, he's just exactly like anybody else."*

TUNNELS PIERCING GEORGETOWS' HILLS

MINING OUTLOOK IN DISTRICT VASTLY IMPROVED.

Democrat Mountain to Be Explored at Depth Never Dreamed of by Early-Day Operators.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., May 28.—Work will be put under way shortly after the first of the month at the Georgetown tunnel, the portal of which is situated on Columbia mountain. C. G. Breitenbach of Chicago, the moving spirit in the enterprise, has just spent several days in camp in going over the situation. He states that funds have been provided—in fact, enough money is now in the treasury to insure the driving of the crosscut 4,000 feet.

This proposition first came into the limelight about two years ago, or at the time the Sigafoos boring machine was brought to Georgetown to be tried out. The machine so far has not been successful, and for that reason the Georgetown Tunnel Transportation company has decided to install a compressor plant.

The driving of this tunnel means that Columbia mountain, a section long neglected from a deep mining standpoint, will be explored. It is doubtful if there is any property on the hill that was ever explored to a depth exceeding 300 feet, and for this reason the people of the district are greatly interested.

It is the intention of the operating company to drive 4,000 feet, when a bend to the left will take place, and Democrat mountain explored at a depth never dreamed of by early-day operators. When the heading cuts under the saddle of the hill a vertical depth of 2,500 feet from surface will be attained. All of the mines of that locality will be intersected, including the Mineral Chief, Astor, Sunburst, Wolverine, Lucky Hesperus, Rogers, Government and Polar Star, with 100 or more smaller properties that have good production records.

Outlook Improved.

With the Georgetown tunnel being driven into Columbian mountain, the Capital tunnel piercing Griffith and every prospect that the Kelly tunnel will be advanced for several thousand feet, the mining outlook in this district is vastly improved. Again there is a rumor in circulation that a deal is pending whereby the Doric tunnel on Saxon mountain will soon be the scene of something big in a mining way, the details of which are not at present to be given to the public.

M. Sidney, manager of the East Argentine Mining, Milling and Tunnel Transportation company, is employing a force of men in repairing the pipe line and in overhauling the compressor plant, preparatory to the advance of the Sidney tunnel. The bore is now in 2,120 feet and the heading is only penetrating the richest section of the hill. From surveys the White, or mother lode of the mountain, will be reached within from 150 to 200 feet, and great things are anticipated with the cutting of the same.

Accord to Resume.

Work is to be resumed at the holdings of the Accord Mining and Milling company on Saxon mountain, in which Boston people are interested. The Culley tunnel now in a distance of 900 feet is to be continued on into the hill for several hundred feet as a series of veins are controlled that have a promising future. It is also proposed to start drifting easterly on both the Emma Nos. 1 and [illegible] veins which were intersected 800 feet from the portal of the bore and is a body of mineralized quartz and mixed ore is showing that is from three to four feet wide. It is anticipated that important discoveries will be made.

Electric power has already been turned [illegible] the Georgetown Power company [illegible] the American Sisters [illegible] below Georgetown. Three machine drills of the St. Clair pattern will be kept in operation. The first vein to be reached in the advance of the crosscut [illegible] extension to the west of the [illegible] nolds and from surveys the [illegible] lies less than 200 feet distant. Then will follow the cutting of the Bellevue-Hudson Anamosa, American Sisters, Federal, Saxon and Magnet, the combined [illegible] of which exceeds $7,000,000.

OPERATIONS RESUMED AT MONTEZUMA MILL

Old St. John's Mine Reopened and Prospects of Camp in General Brightening.

MONTEZUMA, Colo., June 4.—The outlook around the Montezuma is getting brighter. The St. Johns is at work with a small force of men and getting things ready for action. This property is developed by several miles of tunnels, drifts and stopes and it will take some time to get the mine in the shape it was when it kept the smelter going.

The Montezuma Mines Development company has added several four-horse teams to its train of ore haulers. The mill was started up last week and some time must be expected to adjust it to the needs of the ore.

The Princess (Silver King) and the Silver Wave are the principal sources from which the ore for the mill is drawn. The former is a large vein and can furnish a large amount of ore with the present development.

Burke brothers are driving a crosscut tunnel from the Deer creek side of Glacier mountain. Their tunnel will tap the mines already opened several hundred feet deeper than any development on them at the present time and when continued will open the veins worked by the St. Johns ,000 feet below the lowest level worked in that property.

The Ohio-Toledo mill is ready for the machinery and the tunnel is going east into the Collier as fast as possible. Drifting from the main tunnel is also being done in order to determine the extent of the ore bodies cut while driving the tunnel to its present heading.

RED CLIFF IS IMPROVING

Local Mills Solve the Problem of the Successful Operation of Its Mines.

LEADVILLE, Colo., June 4.—Another new mill is promised for Red Cliff before the end of the present year. Eastern capital is back of the scheme, it is announced.

The success of a similar enterprise on the Iron Mask property has prompted other mining men of the district to turn their attention to the local treatment of ore. It is believed that a great saving can be effected in this manner and that a number of properties that could not work otherwise will be able to operate if they can secure mill service on the ground or near at hand.

The Black Iron mine is among those that have met with success through the successful results obtained by mill treatment of ores at home. It is predicted that Red Cliff will soon be a camp in which milled ores will be almost the only product sent to the outside world. Nearly all the ore there is subject to mill treatment. Most of it is now grade and cannot be shipped unless milled at home.

The construction of a number of mills is the most promising condition that the town has had presented for a long time.

CONEY CROSSCUT IS IN A BODY OF ORE

ALMA, Colo., June 4.—Superintendent R. M. Sherwood of the Coney Gould & Silver Mining company, has just been in town from the property, returning with a jack train of supplies. He reports that the Coney crosscut tunnel has entered ore, the body measuring four and a half feet wide. Of this about a foot is high grade. He brought samples down to have them assayed. Some of the ore has been taken out and saved in the course of cutting the vein. Mr. Sherwood says the crosscut tunnel should shortly pay for itself from the new discovery. The superintendent says there has been a late snow at the mine, but work is going on with a force of 10 men. Platforms for ore are being built and it is the intention to begin loading out the product of the late find at once.

Griffith mountain. Drifting is in progress on the Baltic vein and a body of [illegible] from three to 20 inches wide is ex[illegible] 40 feet. The ore is a [illegible] gold silver [illegible] and the first grade will mill from $55 to $60 to the ton.

BREECE HILL BEING ACTIVELY EXPLORED

LITTLE JONNY PRODUCING 7,500 TONS A MONTH.

Maintains Reputation of Being One of Richest Mines in Country. Garbutt a Steady Shipper.

LEADVILLE, Colo., June 4.—The work at present being carried on in the Breece hill section surpasses that done for several years. From the four shafts of the Little Jonny in the neighborhood of 7,500 tons monthly are being shipped, and this famous property still retains its position of producing the richest ore in the country, as noted the other day when a nugget of nearly pure gold weighing 18 pounds was found in the old workings of one of the shafts.

To the south of the Ibex territory the Garbutt is shipping steadily about 75 tons of an excellent grade of ore and driving development work ahead. From the Highland Mary regular shipments are going out, the ore coming from the upper levels, as work for the present has been suspended at the bottom of the shaft on account of an overflow of surface water.

Those interested in the Curran tunnel are still pegging away and within a short distance expect to cut the eastern extension of the Highland Mary ore shoot. Good progress is being made on the new shaft being sunk on the Free American. Prospecting is being pushed on the Bix Six in addition to the iron that is being shipped from the property. At the Penn the regular amount of ore, iron and silicious, is being shipped daily.

Work on the third level of the St. Louis has proved the continuity of the rich gold streak to that depth with the balance of the vein being fully five feet wide. The opening of the vein at this level will continue steadily, and in a short time the developing of the fourth level will start.

More Mills Are Needed.

What Leadville needs more than anything else to develop its resources is more mills for the treatment of its low-grade ores and probably a more economical method of treatment, is the opinion of J. R. Masson, a metallurgist of Melbourne, Australia, who has been making an inspection of the mines in the Leadville district. Mr. Masson has perfected a system of antimony extraction which has been adopted in Australia and which is about to be installed in one of the mining districts of Nevada. It was for the purpose of superintending the installation of this system that he came to America. While in the country he will visit a number of the leading mining centers.

"There is room in this district for a hundred mills. All of them could be made to pay. They would also be the means of keeping the low-grade mines open," he said.

Carbonate Hill Active.

Although some other portions of the district may be receiving more attention just now on account of new discoveries of valuable ore, Carbonate hill continues to be one of the most consistently active sections in the immediate vicinity of Leadville and right now is working as many mines as at any time in recent years. Its total shipments are also keeping up to the usual average.

Among the best producers of the hill are the Evelyn and the Castle View, which are working under lease to M. A. Nicholson and associates.

The Waterloo is another valuable mine of that section.

The Morning and Evening Star properties have also worked regularly and have been among the most valuable producers of the hill. These mines have been the principal producers of manganese ore in the district.

The Catalpa has been active at various times and promises to be a valuable shipper of good ore during the coming summer.

This is to say nothing of the Wolftone—the hill's principal producer and one of the city's most valuable producers. Altogether Carbonate hill is yet a most promising field for active mining.

The Lovejoy property [illegible] the north [illegible] of [illegible] excellent progress [illegible] reach the Yellow gold [illegible] While driving the tunnel in the direction of the Lilian some good ore is being taken out and regular shipments are being made. A force of about a dozen men is at work there now.

BEARS BUY STOCKS TO CLOSE CONTRACTS

Subsidence of Liquidation Marked by Rebound in Some Securities and Better Feeling.

NEW YORK, June 4.—The closing up of the week in the stock market gave evidence of the extent to which the bear position has become extended in the course of the headlong downward plunge of prices. The usual disposition was manifest to close up contracts with the end of the week. The demand thus developed from uncovered bear operators constituted a sustaining power.

The inclination of the bears to cover shorts was emphasized when they demonstrated a resisting power in the market for raiding tactics. Sudden and violent rebounds from rapid declines in one or two stocks, notably Union Pacific and Reading, indicated the subsidence of the pressure of liquidation and prompted a more general demand. There was a feeling of relief from some of the more hysterical forms of alarm that were an influence yesterday. The decrease in the activity in the dealings at the higher levels was a notable feature which was regarded as indicative of uncertainty still remaining in speculative sentiment.

The contest between the government authorities and the railroads over the question of freight rates kept up its dominant interest.

The report that a conference was to take place next week between President Taft and the railroad executives had some effect in inducing a suspension of influence of the subject, but this did not extend beyond a desire to await further developments.

The passage through the Senate of the railroad bill was not regarded as more than a step towards the settlement of a question that is expected to continue an unsettling influence in the stock market until it is out of the way.

There is a belief that the question of railroad rates may have to wait for settlement on the final action on the railroad bill, which now goes to conference.

The decrease of nearly 12,000 in the net surplus of freight cars in two weeks of May reported by the American Railway association was an encouraging factor. There was a time in October of last year when this association reported a net shortage of 5,740 cars in the freight car supply coincident with the height of the business revival. The irregular increase of idle cars up to May 11 to the number of 122,593 is an influence to be reckoned in the disposition of railroad managers to curtail outlay for new equipment. A turn for the better in this situation will be watched as an index of traffic conditions.

Bonds were irregular. Total sales, par value, $1,000,975. United States 2's have declined 1-8 per cent. in the bid price on call since last week.

WHEAT TOUCHES BOTTOM AT 89 CENTS A BUSHEL

Shorts Begin to [illegible]er After Having Hammered September Option Down 17 Cents.

CHICAGO, June 14.—The belief that after a 17-cent break in wheat the short side of the market had become too popular and also dangerous, put up prices today at the close. It was not until the grain could be had at 89 cents a bushel for September, the lowest figure this season, that the outcry was raised. Compared with last night's final quotations today were up a shade to 5-8@3-4. Corn ended unchanged to 1-4 lower and oats unchanged to 1-4 higher. The finish in provisions was irregular, 12 1-2 above to 12 1-2 below the previous close.

Shouting that the winter wheat crop would be the lightest in years was about the last heard by traders in wheat. Smaller shorts for the most part covered. Except at one time when there was an overwhelming outpour of sales the market was a rather small but nevertheless nervous and irregular affair. Coincident with the beginning of the upward reaction later came assertions that Winnipeg had got near to an export basis. September prices here ranged between 89 and 90 3-8@1-2 with the close firm at 90 1-8@1-4, a shade net higher.

Selling of corn was based mainly on expectations of better weather and increased receipts next week. September fluctuated from 58 3-8 to 58 7-8@59 and closed easy at 58 5-8. The cash market was slow. No. 2 yellow closed at 58 1-2@34.

Oats selling was largely speculative. Price variations for the September option extended only from 35 1-8 to 35 1-2 with the close at 35 3-8 cents.

Provisions worked to a stronger position after having intervals of weakness early. The close showed a new decline in pork of 2 1-2 to 12 1-2. Lard finished with a gain of 10 cents and ribs 7 1-2 to 12 1-2.

The Afternoon Stroll

DRAWN BY S. Maillieu

TWO charming afternoon costumes are shown to-day, either of which would make a handsome gown for a garden party or other function. On the left is pictured a graceful tunic gown of heliotrope chiffon cloth over silk of the same shade. The yoke and upper part of the sleeves are formed of heavy lace. The hat is of heliotrope straw, trimmed with aigrettes and wings. The second gown is of rose-colored linen, ornamented simply with bands of lace. The hat is of natural colored straw trimmed with pink convolvuli.

Outdoor Sports

By Margaret E. Sangster

FOR centuries [illegible] had the [illegible] of [illegible]. Away back in the middle ages the knights and warriors went riding forth to the tournament or the battle field while the women stayed at home and [illegible] they were lonely and dull. To be quite fair about it, those women of other days had plenty of work to do in caring for the sick, making bandages for the wounded, and looking after the poor who came clamoring to their gates; yet, on the whole, they seem to have always been sewing. The man had the sword.

The woman had the needle. Either the woman was busy making prosaic everyday garments, or she was bending over an embroidery frame producing exquisite mediæval tapestries. She had no adventures, few outings, and very little fun. She lost her health, her bloom and her beauty while she was still young because of her everlasting in-door drudgery and monotony.

The world has swung into a better day. The girls have as much out-door exercise and interest in sport of a wholesome kind as the boys have. Girls know how to sail a boat, managing it with as much skill as their brothers; they can handle an oar, drive a spirited pony or ride a nettlesome horse. There is very little in the line of athletics from golfing to skating which daunts a girl if she is physically strong, and mentally fearless. The girls of the past, judging by the pictures drawn of them by former novelists, girls, for example, of the eighteenth and early nineteenth century, were terribly frightened at the sight of a mouse; had visions of ghosts stealing out of shadowy corridors, and fainted on the slightest provocation. You girls are not afraid of ghosts nor of mice, nor are you given to fainting fits. Out-door life and sport help girls to be ready for emergency, to be brave and decisive in action and to meet whatever crisis comes with courage and good cheer.

When the blood is red in the veins and the pulse throbs calmly, and the girl is a stranger to headache and backache, and scorns the suspicion of yielding to nerves, you may be sure in your reckoning that she is an out-door girl.

I am thinking, as I write, not so much of those girls who have unlimited leisure, who can play tennis as often as they choose and spend long, bright mornings on the golf links, at discretion, as of another vast host of young women, to whom the Saturday half-holiday brings the first release from the steady business occupation which began on Monday morning. If I say to these girls that they, too, should be indebted every day to air and sunshine for renewal of strength and cheerful spirits, I don't want them to misunderstand me. I know what I am talking about, for all my life I have proudly counted myself as belonging to the ranks of the women who work.

Summer days are long. Summer mornings are lighter. Summer twilights linger in fragrance and golden afterglow. There are moonlight evenings, too, and they are full of charm. A girl who can do nothing [illegible] early in the morning, stand by her window and take deep breaths of the morning air. Deep breathing does more than one fancies in the preservation of tone in the physical system.

Do not despise a brisk walk. Take a few minutes at the luncheon hour to walk around the block; by this I do not mean to stroll or saunter, but to walk fast enough to set the blood in motion. Spend religiously, as a matter of duty, an hour or more of the evening out of doors, when the day's work is done.

When the week-end comes, plan with your friends, if your home is in the city, for a little excursion or picnic to the nearest pleasure place or to green fields [illegible]. The country is never very far from the edge of the town; fares are not too expensive even for slender purses on trolley lines and ferryboats. An afternoon picnic, with a combination basket luncheon and a half-dozen congenial girls, with two or three brothers and sweethearts, to make the affair thoroughly enjoyable is by no means to be despised. The Summer outing of a girls' club may be so organized that during the season the members will secure a great deal of variety.

Everyone is aware that a walk without an object is apt to bore those who take it and that in consequence it does comparatively little good. Have an objective point always. If you go to the woods, bring wild flowers home. If you climb a hill, don't grow tired half way up, but keep steadily on until you reach the place from which you can get a view of the landscape.

If in your week-end outings, you especially desire rest and refreshment, and not active exercise, find, if you can, a farm-house, presided over by a motherly woman who will not charge too high a price for the accommodation of working girls, and keep your hammock there, spending as much time as you can in entire repose. There are numbers of Girls' Friendly Societies that have made provision for the shorter or longer outing of young women at a rate the latter can afford.

Above you, dear girls, stretches God's blue sky. All around you is the atmosphere of Summer. When you pass beautiful gardens, which you do not own, you may still enjoy them and you may remind yourselves that you are at no expense for their cultivation. Nobody altogether owns any field, meadow or mountain in this land, because his right is just to the ground, while all passers-by may share his pleasure in velvet turf, green trees and blossoming flowers.

Be glad every day, as I am, that the wonderful twentieth century has brought so many privileges to women. The twentieth century girl understands baseball and football from start to finish, and is as enthusiastic in her appreciation of a well-played game as any man in the crowd of lookers-on. She plays basket ball herself, and now and then wins a game when she plays against the boys. Take it all in all, the Twentieth Century Girl has the right feeling for good sport and her love of athletics is only making her a finer specimen of womanhood.

Paying One's Way.

"If I happen to meet an acquaintance on a street car, should I allow him to pay my fare? If three or four girls are escorted to the theater by the elder brother of one of them, should he be expected to pay the fares of the crowd, each girl having bought her own ticket to the play?"

Pay your own carfare; the acquaintance who offers to do it for you is over-familiar. If a girl and her brother have invited friends to a theater party, including the purchased tickets for the evening, the brother is [illegible] for the expenses of the entire evening. If, on the contrary, the affair is what is called Dutch treat, each girl should pay for herself on the cars.

An Appetizing Luncheon.

"I grow very tired of the lunch I take from home every day. Sometimes I cannot bring myself to taste it. It is always the same thing: bread and cheese, or [illegible] sandwiches."

Try having greater variety. Sandwiches should be carefully made and they need not always be filled with ham or cheese. A lettuce leaf, dressed with oil and vinegar, a sandwich filled with jam, or with minced chicken, or rare beef or lamb in thin slices, will make a change for you.

Wrap each sandwich by itself in paraffine paper. Try bread and butter with hard-boiled eggs, and when you can manage it, have fruit or cake, a cup custard, or a glass of jelly. If you are near enough to a [illegible] you can obtain a cup of tea or coffee and a sufficient luncheon that will cost no more than what you carry [illegible]. Try this as a change.

For the Lapless Woman

One of the trials of growing stout is the inability of keeping a napkin firmly anchored on one's lap. This is both inconvenient and dangerous to one's best clothes when at a dinner or other social function.

One woman has overcome the difficulty by keeping a pin concealed in the [illegible] of all her [illegible]. With this, she quickly [illegible] to the [illegible] of the waist or her dinner partner, who finds [illegible] under the table uncomfortable.

Stay-at-Home Outings

By H. B. Wallace

THERE is something about Summer that breeds the "wanderlust." Most of us can put off with our lot fairly well, so long as the thermometer keeps itself well in control; let it take to rising, straightway we feel that if we do not get away, if something does not turn up to break the monotony of living, that fate has a grudge against us.

What an ideal thing it would be if everyone of us could shun hot, dusty, sweltering cities from the first bursting of the buds until frost stars the yellowing foliage.

When Nature is at her most alluring, fairly tantalizing us to come out and revel in her, it takes a lot of grace to keep amiable if our only acquaintance with her is patches of blue between sun-baked sky-scrapers or the sickly green which is all a self-respecting tree can manage that must thrust itself through yards of asphalt and brick.

Yet, what's the use of grumbling?

Does it make you any easier or more amiable to begrudge your friends their country homes; to turn sulky because you cannot be touring in an automobile through Europe or resting body, brain and soul in some camp in the Adirondacks or the Rockies; to feel yourself afflicted above all mortals because you are not to have so much as a sight of the sea this Summer?

If you are tied to the town for the next few months, it is a dreadful pity, but that is all there is to it. If you can't get away, you can't! Don't add to your misery by grouchy discontent.

If you are not to have a pleasant Summer thrust upon you, make it. All that is needed is the will and the wit, with, possibly, a little [illegible] thrown in. It is surprising, though, what a lot of pleasure can be had at small cost when the determination to enjoy oneself is there.

We are not all created in our vacation yearnings from the same [illegible]. Sometimes it is business that keeps us fixed to "holding down our job;" at other times a slim purse; occasionally duty strangely capitalized. Whatever the cause, effects are similar unless we learn how to override them.

This overriding may not be alike for any two of us. Tastes in outings differ as much as tastes in husbands or food. To plan a happy stay-at-home Summer to all [illegible] is to inquire [illegible] at the [illegible] of the planner.

Each of us must do his or her own planning. What if your notions of happiness do not appeal to your neighbor—it is your outing, isn't it? Don't be persuaded by sympathizing, or [illegible] or ridicule into enjoying yourself in any but your own way.

Sit down calmly and think. Say to yourself, "The outing is [illegible] for the next three months. What can I do to [illegible] up high lights into its blackness?" [illegible] it quickly by, "What do I want to do?"

The trouble with most stay-at-home outings is they are arranged on the [illegible]. If you plan a sane, sanitary, and orderly vacation, you may feel better, know more by Fall, but you won't have a good time.

If your idea of a happy Summer is a drifting canoe and the books for which you have no time the rest of the year, don't feel it your duty to go for long, sweltering walks in the country that your soul hates, because that is the accepted reading of outings.

Take to your book and your kimona every chance you get, nay, make chances, but take to them in the open air. Fix up a cosy corner on an out-of-the-way porch, on the roof, in the back yard, anywhere that you will get health-giving light and air.

The very word outing presupposes an outdoor life. No matter how lazy you are do not spend your Summer behind barred shutters fearful of heat. Let sunlight, air and as much scenery as you can compass be the underlying principle of every stay-at-home outing. Many persons grow hectic thinking they cannot have change of air; then shut out the air they might have.

Don't be hampered by pride or what people will say. Far better take cheap pleasures than to [illegible] because you cannot have costly ones. If you cannot afford to spend the Summer or even a week at the seashore, surely you can take an occasional day off for the dollar excursion that most of our larger inland cities have.

True, it may mean leaving at seven A. M. and uncomfortable jostling with those you may call "[illegible]." Is the breath of the salt air any less bracing or the music of the waves less soothing on that account?

Are you shackled by home duties? Do you face a Summer in the kitchen or keeping fretful children in line? Go in for stay-at-home outings more than ever.

Simplify, shirk and shut your ears to the call of broom and dust pan. Lighten your work in every possible way and take the leisure gained to enjoy yourself in the open air. You may not be able to get further than the back porch or the fire escape many a day, but just being there, basking in the sun, will make you a happier, more restful mother and wife.

What you save on your simpler meals, spend in taking the children to the parks. Arrange little picnics where father will come to supper, go for moonlight trolley rides, or, if accessible, take slow walks through country lanes in the cool of evening. Whenever you know there is to be a band concert, plan to attend it with your whole family.

If you concentrate on pleasure instead of bewailing your lack of it, you will be surprised to find what a lot of fun comes your way. Stop sighing because you cannot get into the country for vacation and make possible the joys of the city. They are manifold even in Summer, if you but look for them.

Green Fields and Running Brooks

By Temple Bailey

LITTLE Busy Girl always looks at me reproachfully when I talk of green fields and running brooks. "It's all very well for you," she states, "to get enthusiastic about nature, about wild flowers and the [illegible] of the forest. But if you were cooped up as I am, you couldn't even think about such things. It's too aggravating." She sighed. "But I love it, even if I am shut up here in a tall building with never a sight of the trees."

"The trouble is," I told her the other day, "that you don't take advantage of your opportunities."

Little Busy Girl flared, "I'd like to know what opportunities I have in a big city."

"Come with me next Saturday afternoon," I invited, "and I'll show you."

Now Little Busy Girl's big city happens to be the great Western metropolis. I took her to a park where, by artificial methods, a little stream has been made which ripples over rocks so naturally that it needs little imagination to believe oneself in some quiet country neighborhood. On the banks of this little stream Busy Girl and I ate our lunch. After that we walked to a rustic bridge so shaded by overhanging trees that about us all was silence and emerald dimness.

"Doesn't it rest you?" I asked Busy Girl. "Could you do any better than this if you were miles away from Chicago?"

Busy Girl's answer was enthusiastic. She wanted to know of more places within the city limits where one might run away from the smoke and heat into such charming solitude.

So for several Saturdays we explored the parks, finding a wonder world where birds sang and the winds whispered through the trees. At first Busy Girl feared a crowd, but we found that the people usually gathered at points where there was something to see, the animal houses, the lakes with the boats, the hot houses claimed their attention.

One day Busy Girl and I discovered an old-fashioned garden so hidden by its box hedge that few people noticed it. Within were all the flowers that our grandmothers loved. Hundred leaved roses, larkspur, phlox, petunias and verbenas. A riot of color and fragrance.

Then there was always the lake, the big lake with the white sails flashing in the distance. There was one point in Jackson Park where we could look out into what seemed infinite distance. With our backs to land and our eyes gazing lakeward we might have been alone in the world. At hazy twilight we stood there and the moon, a round gold glow, shone through the gray. Little Busy Girl caught her breath quickly. "Is there any place anywhere more beautiful than this?" she asked.

Yet many people will say that that big Western city lacks beauty, because they do not know where to find it. And it is so with all of our cities, in most of them we can find green fields and running brooks if we know where to look. None of us need complain that we must breathe smoke and grime and rest our eyes only on skyscrapers. A trolley ride will take use into farming sections, where the broad pastures and white sheep and lowing herds have poetic realizations.

Wild flowers and birds can be found within easy reach of almost any town. In fact, trolley cars have brought the country nearer the city, even as they have brought the city in touch with the country. The farmer brings his daughters to the shops with [illegible], just as the girls who work in the shops make their way to the farm on a half-holiday.

Country life is particularly fascinating to those brought up in towns. It is sometimes easy to make an arrangement by which the week-end may be spent in some plain house, where fresh milk, fresh eggs, cottage cheese, homemade cakes and pies and bread will be the tempting fare. There will be opportunity, too, to go into the dim old barn, where the hens steal their nests in the loft, where the cows come in at twilight to be milked, where the horses stand in their stalls, fat and sleek and partaking of the comfort that belongs to prosperous farm life.

No one who loves nature need go hungry for it even in a big city. I would advise girls who want this Summer to lead the out-of-door life to plan an itinerary for Saturday afternoons which shall include odd and out-of-the-way places in the parks as well as the prosperous agricultural sections beyond the outskirts of the city. In New York one can in a half-day's outing reach the mountains, the sea and the green fields. Most of this can be done for a simple five cent fare, and at the most ten cents.

With a pleasant companion, a good book and a basket of lunch, any girl's Saturday afternoon may be spent close to the heart of nature. Little Busy Girl is beginning to understand that we need not envy the rich in their outings. The heart of youth, the capacity for enjoyment, a little money to spend and a little loaf to eat, these make for much happiness. There should be no carping criticism to mar our afternoon's pleasure. Because your [illegible] are near the city, because the bee brushes the shade of a Summer [illegible], because your farm boasts electric light, is no reason why you should spurn it. Make the best of the pleasures that are near at hand and do not yearn for the unattainable. Your green fields are none the less green because they are part of a park and the ripple of the artificial brook, if you listen with ears that hear, shall sing a song of content.

Earning a Vacation

By May C. Moore

NOW THAT the Summer with its floods of gleaming sunshine and its enervating heat is upon us, who is there among our wage earners who would not gladly turn from the monotonous click of the typewriter, or the whir of the sewing machine, to the peaceful quiet of a Summer outing.

The average worker not only yearns for it, but needs its recuperating effects. She may be one who is so fortunately situated as to be permanently settled in a congenial vocation, yet with the approach of Summer days, she cannot resist the overwhelming desire for a change from the tedium of work in the work-a-day world.

If she is a dressmaker, she is apt to feel that she should have been a teacher with a long Summer vacation, if an office worker, she is more than ever convinced as Summer approaches that she was never really fitted for anything but out-of-door employment. Whatever she is toiling for her daily bread, she looks longingly toward a Summer outing, but the ever present need of her present earnings and the loss of time and money that a change would involve, seems to place a vacation beyond her reach.

Now, if a Summer vacation means only a long period of idleness it would without doubt be out of the reach of the average wage earner.

But a vacation with an opportunity to earn expenses by turning a simple talent to practical account is sometimes planned to advantage and the experiment in nine cases out of ten will give a satisfactory result.

Girls who could not spend a vacation in idleness, have deliberately chosen work for which they seem to have an aptness, and have provided themselves with a change by turning it to practical account.

I have suggested the little plan of earning money by the care of children and the instance of success in instructing them in the mystery and beauty of nature, merely to show the range of the possibilities afforded by this one work alone.

They represent just two of the many practical plans of utilizing a fad or an aptitude in some one direction, and whether you are an enthusiast with an ear keenly attuned to the "call of the wild" or merely a gentle, womanly young girl who seeks the companionship of children, you are not without your opportunity to enjoy a vacation while earning your expenses.

Presents for the Girl Graduate.

Having a great many friends among school girls who graduated last year, I was at a loss to know what to give them. I noticed at the time that others were equally puzzled to find something that seemed entirely suitable. The need seemed to be for something dainty and inexpensive, and the idea occurred to me that I might not only make suitable presents for my friends, but that I might earn something by helping other women prepare dainty little presents, who had less leisure than I.

With some variations I duplicated the things that I made for my own friends, and I sold them so readily that I enlarged upon the plan this season and made it more profitable.

The articles that I furnished were along the line of dainty needlework, dainty handkerchiefs, needlework bags, collar and cuff sets and many little ornamental articles that convey the touch of individuality that is always so acceptable and pleasing.

I have noticed the number of inquiries from needleworkers who inquire for ways to dispose of their work, and I thought the suggestion might lead some one to take advantage of this opportunity.

M. R. L.

Parents and friends usually present their daughters and classmates with flowers or jewelry, but presenting an inexpensive present, the work of one's own hand, is a pretty custom.

In these days when fine handwork is so popular, a piece of dainty needlework is always welcome. It is one of the opportunities too often overlooked by the young woman who wishes to sell her work, and I am sure that [illegible] will appreciate the [illegible] of "M. R. L." for suggesting a plan that [illegible] any girl young [illegible] might put into practice.

Visiting Cards.

I am sending you a sample of my penmanship. I wish to know if it is good enough to use on visiting cards. This is not a very good sample, but I want to utilize my skill in this way to earn a little money. How shall I go about it?

NINA B.

The sample of the work that you send me is excellent. I am surprised that you say it is not the best work that you can do.

It represents the English script more than any other type, and many people use it exclusively on visiting cards.

You can make a test of your accomplishment as a means of earning money at a trifling expense.

Purchase ten cents' worth of visiting cards and prepare samples of your "very best" work, and leave them together with your own business card at the largest stationery stores, souvenir stands, or other places where they may be willing to take them. They are all in a position to get orders for you, although, of course, you must offer a generous commission.

A very convenient way of submitting them, is to buy a plain, tiny square frame and place your samples on cardboard under the glass.

In soliciting orders of this kind, take your samples, mounted in this way. The neat arrangement itself will make favorable impression. They can be hung up in a good position or placed in a case, with articles of merchandise without fear of being soiled or mislaid.

Work and Play for the Idle Hour

Porch or Hammock Cushion

Drawn by Sarah Hale Hunter

WHEN using this printed design from the paper the directions are as follows:—

If the material used is very sheer, the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a [illegible] lead pencil. If your linen is [illegible], buy a piece of impression paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design neatly [illegible] and ready to be embroidered.

In transferring a design when only one part is given, fold your linen so that the two right sides come together. Between these two sides insert the [illegible] of the impression paper, placing the [illegible] sides of paper toward each other, then place your design on the folded material and draw each line firmly with a hard, sharp pencil. You will find that both sides of the design are produced on the linen.

This design for a hammock or porch cushion may be carried out in braid, or outlined with heavy rope silk, or [illegible] cotton.

The inner markings should be done in the [illegible] stitch, and the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] solid. If preferred, the design [illegible] be done in long and short outline stitch, which is [illegible] effective. [illegible] will be quite plain.

Miss Hunter's Correspondence

[illegible]:—A dainty gift for a man would be a [illegible] holder of tinted lavender linen, with a design of three bunches of [illegible] tied with ribbon upon it. An oval [illegible] board is [illegible] about 6 by 10 inches, with a brass or nickel rod with [illegible] and a piece of cardboard for the back.

The [illegible] may be tinted and the edges worked in long and short stitch, with shades of violet. The center of the [illegible] is a star-shaped stitch of white, with a dot of [illegible] inside. The ribbon [illegible] may be tinted and outlined with the shades of lavender and white.

After it is finished the linen is [illegible] on the board, the brackets [illegible] in place and the cardboard pasted neatly on the back. Two pieces of [illegible] ribbon tied in a bow are attached to the back, by which it may be hung.

Patchwork Quilts.

E. B.:—[illegible] patterns for patchwork quilts have been given in this [illegible]. It would be best to [illegible] one of the old-fashioned quilts. Very little work of this kind is done now, and the [illegible] are much [illegible] attractive [illegible].

Apron.

Mollie:—A dainty little apron is one made of plain white lawn, round in shape, and finished with a ruffle of dotted Swiss, edged with Valenciennes lace, and set on the apron with narrow lace [illegible] run with lavender ribbon. The [illegible] is also of dotted Swiss edged with lace. The strings of the same, or of lavender ribbon run through under beading at the top of the apron. A pretty finish would be to feather stitch the lace or with lavender silk, and also the edges of the [illegible] beading through which the ribbon strings are run.

In Turn.

Nellie:—I will be glad to give the pattern you ask for, and thank you for your kind appreciation of the designs.

Collarless Yoke.

Helen P.:—A novelty this season is a pretty embroidered collarless yoke to wear with any wash dress. It can be made in a square neck of fine or heavy white linen, [illegible] on both edges with small scallops, and a small dot in each. The space between the two edges may be filled with quite large dots. All the work should be well-padded, and worked solid, using [illegible] white embroidery cotton, or a color, as the prefers. A pair of cuffs to match will complete a stylish and useful set to wear with summer dresses.

[illegible] Case.

Jane J.:—A case for a pair of [illegible] will not be difficult to make. This pretty flowered cretonne bound with a plain shade of cretonne or [illegible]. The [illegible] should be cut the same shape as a [illegible], [illegible] the [illegible] for an [illegible] pair of [illegible] with [illegible].

The [illegible] may be embroidered on the flap, which fastens with [illegible] a snap catch or a button and buttonhole. A row of feather-stitching finishes the edge of the binding, or machine stitching can be used instead. A case of this sort will be very useful to keep the embroidery [illegible] in when not in use.

Pillow.

Mrs. Howard:—A suitable pillow to use in a hammock is one of tan burlap, with a bold design of flowers, leaves and long stems embroidered on it in bright colors red, [illegible] and golden brown—using either silk or [illegible] embroidery cotton for the work.

The red for the flowers, green for leaves and golden brown for the stems, outlining the entire design with black. The embroidery may be solid in satin stitch or twilled and outlined. A pillow girdle, green or brown, finishes the [illegible].

Dressing Sacque.

Eleanor:—Dotted Swiss will make a simple, pretty dressing sacque for warm weather. It can be trimmed with Valenciennes lace edge and insertion around the V-shaped neck and border of sacque, and down both sides of the front.

Another row of insertion is [illegible] on the sacque, arranged in shallow scallops with the material cut [illegible] beneath. The effect will be very pretty. The elbow sleeves are also [illegible] with lace and insertion on the edge and the scallops of insertion above. A [illegible] and ends of ribbon finish the sacque at the neck.

Linen Coat.

Mrs. John W.:—A plain or [illegible] coat with a hat of the same [illegible] be [illegible] useful on a [illegible] day in [illegible] than a heavier coat would not be [illegible]. It can be [illegible] with a [illegible] of small scallops with dots [illegible] in satin stitch worked entirely around the coat, neck and sleeves.

The dots should be well padded and the scallops also. The coat is made without a collar and [illegible] in [illegible] with [illegible]. A design of this kind can be used upon almost any material for a child's coat.

Knitted Helmet for Outings

TO make this helmet, [illegible] for hunting, motoring and outdoor sleeping, 4 oz. of [illegible] knitting worsted and 4 steel needles No. 12, and 1 bone [illegible] No. [illegible], are [illegible].

[illegible] are [illegible] first.

Cast on 64 stitches and knit a plain 5 inches long (or as long as [illegible]) in plain knitting, [illegible] do not [illegible] this off.

Now, using 4 [illegible], put 28 stitches on each [illegible], leaving the center 28 stitches of the front and back [illegible] on the original needles, and join to a round.

Then knit 2 plain, 2 purl for 1 or 4 [illegible] for the [illegible] at [illegible].

Now bind off the stitches on first needle, knit plain across center needle and bind off stitches on third needle. Break yarn.

Finish the [illegible] a row of picots.

To make the picot, fasten yarn, 1 single [illegible] in [illegible] stitch, [illegible], put [illegible] through the top loop and [illegible] of single crochet, [illegible] over hook, draw up a [illegible] hook and draw [illegible] all [illegible] on hook, skip 2 stitches, 1 [illegible] in next stitch. [illegible] capes, putting extra picot on [illegible].

A Novel Vacation

Six girls, or rather four and two married women, last Summer spent a novel vacation that afforded them such pleasure they will repeat it this year.

Tired of the conventional life of hotels, they were about to go into camp when the husband of one of them suggested, "Why not spend August in a [illegible] boat? I know of one that I think can be hired, mules, driver and all, and you girls can have a delightful lazy time while Jack and I are off on that Western hunting trip."

The boat was straightway inspected and it was found that with small expense it could be made livable.

A thorough scrubbing, a coat or two of white paint on the inside, the purchase of a [illegible] stove, four folding [illegible] [illegible] feet high, the necessary cooking utensils of aluminum, and a folding bath tub represented the most elaborate [illegible].

The [illegible] the girls called it [illegible] the duty of bedroom, sitting room, dining room and even kitchen on rainy days, and fitted out in green and white. The party [illegible], where [illegible] or three of the party slept, were [illegible] by [illegible] green denim [illegible]. The [illegible] [illegible] the two windows [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible].

A [illegible] of the Dutch type with a [illegible] in the lower part [illegible] could be [illegible] top or [illegible] [illegible] white paint [illegible].

[illegible] and white [illegible] a [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] or two [illegible] for [illegible], was [illegible] on a plate rail [illegible] china was pretty enough to be decorative. Each girl [illegible] the knives, forks, spoons and table pieces of plated silver, thus making [illegible] for company. A [illegible] and a dozen [illegible] purchased.

One of the [illegible] was [illegible] room refrigerator, which, with several chafing dishes, two self heating irons and a small washtub [illegible] the equipment.

Each girl's wardrobe [illegible] to what could be [illegible] in a suit case. Cotton shirtwaist suits of [illegible] crepe, simple white [illegible] with Dutch necks for evening, a [illegible] for camping, and [illegible] elaborate [illegible] we be invited to [illegible] and have to stay home for lack of [illegible] as one of the party put it, [illegible] besides the suit worn to the boat, and a raincoat.

Such a delightful [illegible] was not automobile [illegible], but [illegible] compensation in [illegible] to see the scenery as the [illegible] along, while the driver, [illegible] than a [illegible], had a [illegible] that he fortunately did not [illegible] to [illegible].

That boat [illegible] up in the [illegible] of the day [illegible] a [illegible] no [illegible] of hurry, no [illegible] to go a [illegible] on [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] go for [illegible] try [illegible] to [illegible].
